Blackjack hosts snowmobile races

By IAN MINIELLY

WAKEFIELD TOWNSHIP — The Midwest Extreme Snowmobile Challenge, presented by Moto Trax, was held at the Blackjack Ski Resort Saturday and Sunday. Tim Moon, assistant general manager of Blackjack said, “The event is open to the public with free admission. This is our second year hosting and we are already discussing doing it for a third year.”

The weather was warm and the sky was overcast Saturday, keeping the sun from blinding the racers and spectators. Todd Meyers, event organizer, said the conditions on the ski hills were excellent for late winter or early spring snowmobile racing. Meyers usually runs about 12 events per year between Minn., Wis., and the U.P. and it is a whole family affair. His wife Andrea is the score keeper while

Gogebic Range Health Foundation helps to keep residents healthy, active

By IAN MINIELLY

IRONWOOD — The Gogebic Range Health Foundation was born from the purchase of Grandview by Aspirus Ironwood. The sale created, what is hoped is a perpetual endowment, to support healthy activities in the surrounding geographic area. The GRHF is an independent 501C3 with one full time program director and one part time executive director, maintaining an office in the eye center at the bottom of the hill from Aspirus Ironwood.

Candy Pogliano, executive director, said their mission statement reads, “To work collaboratively with community and region to improve the health status and to establish Gogebic-Iron Range as a fun place to be healthy.”

Currently the GRHF is helping DOVE fundraise for their color run around Sunday Lake in Wakefield April 29. The September Bridges and Bluff half marathon on the Iron Belle Trail is another healthy event the GRHF is assisting.

The SISU Dirt Crew and the GRHF have begun working together to plan a bike race this upcoming fall at Copper Peak while the GRHF is helping Aspirus Ironwood with its Nov. 11 winter formal.

Wakefield VFW holds annual breakfast fundraiser Sunday

WAKEFIELD — The Wakefield Veteran's of Foreign Wars held a breakfast buffet on Sunday morning.

Attendees enjoyed an array of breakfast foods including biscuits and gravy, corned beef hash, fried potatoes, sausage, eggs, breakfast burritos, coffee and juice, and a desert table. “It's been a busy day,” said Volunteer Marsha Jurakovich,

“People are very generous.”

The annual event helps to raise funds for the VFW. There is also a raffle held to raise funds for the scholarships, which are distributed to Wakefield-Marenisco students at the end of the school year.

All those who bought a breakfast were given a complimentary 50/50 raffle ticket, with more available for purchase.

“There are three scholarships from the axillary VFW that go to the local high school,” said volunteer Carole Lillar. “The scholarships aren't for a lot, but if we can even help out with buying books, any little bit helps.” The scholarships are awarded in May.

The breakfast has been going on for years and is a favorite among locals. “It's a good way to promote the VFW and get our name out into the community, and people really enjoy the breakfast,” said Lillar.

BUDGET CUTS?

Associated Press

IN THIS March 22, photo, 4- and 5-year-olds at the Agape Educational Center in Canton, Miss., learn words that start with R and concepts like opposites; over/under, tall/short, do/don't; by using "Between the Lions," a TV show that was produced at Mississippi Public Broadcasting. President Donald Trump's proposal to erase federal support for public broadcasting would reach far into rural America.

Goodbye, Gestalt Gardener? Cuts threaten more than NPR

BELZONI, Miss. (AP) — In a Mississippi Delta hamlet that calls itself the "Catfish Capital of the World," public radio is one of Gus Mohamed's constant companions on his long commutes past cotton and soybean fields.

One of his favorite shows, "Gestalt Gardener," bears some hallmarks of public broadcasting stereotypes: quirky voices, cheesy music and zealous listeners calling with questions. And it could go off the air because of President Donald Trump's proposal to eliminate federal funding for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, or CPB.

"I really don't know what I would listen to," said Mohamed, a 57-year-old Trump voter who isn't convinced the president will get enough support to go through with cuts that would hit Mississippi Public Broadcasting.

Mohamed, a nurse, spends some 20 hours a week with the voices on public radio. His attachment is apparent in the parody song he wrote about the do-what-makes-you-happy horticulturalist who hosts the gardening show, set to the tune of "The Ballad of Davy Crockett": "Felder, Felder Rushing, prince of the plant frontier ..."

Some conservatives have salivated over the idea of cutting funding for public broadcasting, criticizing it as a bastion of elites waxing poetic about liberal politics. But the cuts wouldn't be isolated to Washington or National Public Radio.

Officials at Mississippi Public Broadcasting say they do not know what would be cut if federal support for CPB disappears, so it's unclear if the call-in shows with physicians, money managers and lawyers could see reduced airtime or be chopped entirely.

Mississippi Public Broadcasting already has been losing state support because of dwindling state tax collections. It gets about $1.9 million from CPB, and another $1 million from private donations, said executive director Ronnie Agnew. It was slated to receive about $6.9 million from the state this year but saw that slashed by $345,000 and stands to lose another $461,000 in state money for the next fiscal year.

Some Republicans say public broadcasting doesn't serve an essential government function and shouldn't get tax dollars, anyway, so it's unlikely lawmakers in one of the nation's poorest states would make up the loss.

Money from CPB typically represents 10 percent to 15 percent of a station's budget. Stations serving rural and minority communities would likely be hit hardest because they don't have a broad enough donor base to make up the difference, CPB's president and chief executive officer, Patricia de Stacy Harrison, recently told Congress.

Congress last year put $445 million into CPB — a relatively tiny slice of the $4 trillion federal budget.

CPB says it gives financial support to 575 television or radio stations, and 248 of those serve rural areas.

Shelly Battista says it would be a personal loss if "Gestalt Gardener" disappears. The show helped her meet people and get involved with a master gardeners' program when she moved a few years ago to Crystal Springs, a town of about 5,000 some 25 miles south of the capital of Jackson.

"My favorite thing to do is to turn on the show and listen to it while I'm in the garden," Battista said. "I love Felder's gardening philosophy. He's open-minded and kind of funky."

Education is a big part of public broadcasting's mission, especially crucial in a state that consistently lags in national education rankings. There's Ed, the puppet with spiky purple hair who teaches kids about nutrition on "Ed Said." And not all of the money goes to radio and TV programs.

The network also gives literacy grants to preschools, including Agape Educational Center in Canton, a town of about 13,250 roughly 20 miles north of Jackson. One recent morning, 15 bouncy 4- and 5-year-olds were learning words that start with "R" and concepts like opposites — over/under, tall/short, do/don't — by using "Between the Lions," a TV show produced by Mississippi Public Broadcasting.

"I would hate to see this go away," Margaret Chapman, the center's executive director, said as a teacher asked the children to clap for each syllable in a series of words.

Document: Crack-smoking man charged in Atlanta overpass fire

ATLANTA (AP) — The man accused of starting the raging fire that destroyed part of Interstate 85 north of downtown Atlanta was talking about smoking crack just before the blaze began, according to his arrest affidavit.

Basil Eleby told city and federal investigators that he had discussed smoking crack cocaine with two companions under the highway overpass before deciding to do the drug alone, The Atlanta Journal-Constitution reported Saturday.

Jail records show Eleby has been arrested 19 times since 1995, mostly on drug charges. Accused of starting the fire below the elevated highway, Eleby now faces charges of first-degree arson and first-degree property damage.

Sophia Brauer and Barry Thomas were arrested along with Eleby on Friday, both charged with criminal trespass in the area used to store state-owned construction materials and equipment. "We believe they were together when the fire was set and Eleby is the one who set the fire," Deputy Insurance Commissioner Jay Florence said.

Flames and smoke billowed high above Atlanta's skyline Thursday. The fire burned so hot that the concrete and steel overpass disintegrated, crippling traffic in a city known for dreadful rush-hour congestion.

Thomas told investigators a different story, the paper reported. "Mr. Thomas watched Basil Eleby place a chair on top of a shopping cart, reach under the shopping cart and ignite it," the affidavit says.

Both Eleby and Thomas said they fled the scene before the fire became a roaring blaze that disintegrated the concrete and steel overpass.

Police and firefighters kept motorists out of harm's way and retreated when they saw telltale signs of an imminent collapse.

"They heard the cracking of the concrete," Atlanta Fire Chief Joel Baker said. "They could see concrete was flying all over the place toward firefighters."

Experts in structural engineering said fires on highways and bridges rarely burn long enough or hot enough to cause a complete collapse — but it has happened. Intense heat can compromise even steel-reinforced concrete, said Lauren Stewart, director of the Structural Engineering and Materials Laboratory at Georgia Tech in Atlanta.

"With fires, especially fires that burn for long periods and with high heat, you can see structures, anything from buildings to bridges, can have their material properties degrade," Stewart said.

Senate heads for Supreme Court showdown

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate is headed for a tense showdown over President Donald Trump's Supreme Court nominee that could have far-reaching consequences for Congress, the high court and the nation.

Majority Leader Mitch McConnell and his Republicans are determined to confirm Judge Neil Gorsuch within the week. But to do so, they will likely have to override Democratic objections and unilaterally change Senate rules so that Gorsuch can be confirmed with a simple majority in the 100-seat chamber, instead of the 60-voter threshold.

Though it may seem arcane, the approach is known on Capitol Hill as the "nuclear option," because it strikes at the heart of the Senate's traditions of bipartisanship and collegiality.

It would allow all future Supreme Court nominees to be confirmed without regard to the objections of the minority party. And senators of both parties say that proceeding with the rules change could ultimately lead to complete elimination of the minority party's ability to block legislation via filibuster, one of the few remaining mechanisms that force bipartisan cooperation in Congress.

"Once you go down this path it's awful easy just to keep going, and that is not a good thing," said Sen. Pat Roberts, R-Kan., a senior lawmaker.

Nevertheless, Republican senators are fully prepared to take the step, blaming Democrats for forcing them into it by preparing to filibuster a well-qualified nominee.

And Democrats are just as ready to push the GOP to pull the trigger, even as they argue that McConnell and Republicans will have only themselves to blame.

"He can prove that he cares about the Senate by not changing the rules," Minority Leader Chuck Schumer of New York told The Associated Press, referring to McConnell.

As of now, Gorsuch claims support from 54 senators — the 52 Republicans, along with two moderate Democrats who are up for re-election in states Trump won, Joe Manchin of West Virginia and Heidi Heitkamp of North Dakota. One by one, most of the other Democrats have lined up against Gorsuch, citing his rulings in favor of corporations or his vague answers during his confirmation hearings. Though Democrats remain a handful shy of the 41 votes that would be required to mount a filibuster and trigger a rules change, it is the widely expected outcome.

"I remain very worried about our polarized politics and what the future will bring, since I'm certain we will have a Senate rule change that will usher in more extreme judges in the future," Democratic Sen. Claire McCaskill of Missouri said Friday as she became the latest Democrat to announce plans to join the filibuster against Gorsuch.

Gorsuch, 49, has served more than a decade as a federal appeals court judge based in Denver. He is mild-mannered but deeply conservative, in the mold of the justice he would replace, Antonin Scalia, who died in February 2016.

McCaskill and other Democrats have pointed out that while Gorsuch's confirmation won't change the ideological balance of a court that will be likely to split 5-4 on important cases, that could be what happens next as liberal justices age along with Justice Anthony Kennedy, 80, who often acts as a swing vote.

Republicans argue that the filibuster has almost never been used against a Supreme Court nominee and they are right; even Clarence Thomas got onto the court without a filibuster, despite highly contentious confirmation hearings over sexual harassment claims from Anita Hill.

The only Supreme Court nominee to have been blocked by a filibuster was Abe Fortas, President Lyndon Johnson's nominee for chief justice in 1968. After a procedural vote failed, Johnson withdrew Fortas' nomination. Fortas was already a sitting justice on the Court.

Mustard, sherry inspire adult-friendly chicken tenders

By MELISSA D'ARABIAN
Associated Press

I mentioned to my husband recently that I had mastered an oven-baked chicken tender recipe, and his response was a little underwhelming; dismissive even. It sounded like a healthier version of a restaurant kid's meal, and frankly, he wasn't interested.

At the dinner table, however, I served them to the family, calling the dish "fried chicken" to my husband, and "chicken tenders" to my kiddos. I'm a big believer in cooking only one meal for the whole family — I'm not a short-order cook — but certainly the name could vary a little?

Success on all fronts! My husband is the fried chicken lover of the bunch, but he watches what he eats fairly strictly. And he was sold on the chicken — crunchy on the outside and juicy on the inside; no dipping sauce needed. (But hey, if you want to grab some low-fat yogurt or ranch dressing, I wouldn't stop you.)

The secret to this adult-friendly chicken tender recipe is a few hours in a simple low-cal marinade made of sherry and Dijon mustard, which tenderizes the chicken and then serves as the glue for panko bread crumbs. Using panko means lots of texture and crunch without an overly heavy coating. (Another option: pulse up some fresh bread in a processor to create jagged, fluffy bread crumbs, and you'll only need a slice or two of bread for a full recipe of tenders.)

Spraying the tenders with an oil mister combined with high oven heat work together to create a crispy crust — not quite fried, but pretty darned close. With boneless skinless chicken breast meat boasting 31 grams of protein per serving (and fewer than 4 grams of fat), this easy chicken tender recipe may take a permanent spot in your weeknight dinner menu rotation. Both the adults and the kiddos will be thrilled.

DIJON AND SHERRY OVEN CHICKEN TENDERS

Start to finish: 35 minutes, plus marinating time

- Servings: 4
- 1/4 cup Dijon mustard
- 1/4 cup dry sherry (or other fortified wine, such as Marsala or Madeira or Port)
- 1 teaspoon dried Italian herbs, or dried

Associated Press

DIJON AND sherry chicken tenders make a great meal for an early spring picnic — warm and tasty.

- herbes de provence, or dried tarragon
 - 1/2 teaspoon kosher salt
 - 1/4 teaspoon ground black pepper
 - 1 1/2 pounds boneless skinless chicken breast tenders, or boneless skinless chicken breast cut into strips about one-inch wide and three inches long
 - 1 cup panko bread crumbs
 - olive oil in a spray mister (or nonstick spray)
- Place the mustard, sherry, herbs, salt and pepper in a large resealable plastic bag and mix the contents by squishing the bag a little. Add the chicken to the bag, coating well with the mustard mixture. Let marinate in the refrigerator for 1-8 hours.
- Once ready to bake, heat the oven to 400 degrees F. Fit a baking rack on a large baking sheet. (Cover the baking sheet with foil to catch drips and make clean up easier.)

Lightly spray the baking rack with olive oil to keep chicken from sticking. Place the bread crumbs on a plate and use a fork to remove chicken tenders from the marinade and toss in crumbs to coat on all sides. Place the breaded chicken tenders on the baking rack on the baking sheet and spray the top of the chicken lightly with the olive oil mister. Bake the chicken until cooked through to 160 degrees, about 20-25 minutes. Serve.

Cooks note: Add 1 tablespoon of honey to the marinade for honey-mustard tenders.

Baby on Board: Never too young to go length of Appalachian Trail

DALEVILLE, Va. (AP) — If anyone is qualified to hike nearly 2,200 miles while carrying a baby, it's probably Bekah and Derrick Quirin.

Both 25, the Quirins have accumulated lengthy backcountry resumes — both have degrees in outdoor leadership and years of trail experience, both led week-long hikes in Washington and managed recreation programs in South Carolina, both trained as wilderness first responders.

But none of the Blue Ridge couple's adventures have been quite like the one they plan to begin Monday: tackling the 2,190-mile length of the Appalachian Trail while carrying their 1-year-old daughter, Ellie. They plan to post pictures and descriptions of their trek - and plug their sponsors — online at their EllieOnTheAT Instagram account and at www.ellieonthetrail.com.

Both Quirins grew up near the trail — Derrick Quirin in Betsworth County, where his father is associate pastor of Bonsack Baptist Church, and Bekah Quirin in Blue Ridge, where her father is lead pastor at Fellowship Community Church.

Having dated since high school and completed North Greenville University's outdoor leadership program together, the Quirins said they had dreamed about taking on the AT for years.

But when college ended, they both had full-time job offers. The trail would have to wait.

"We did the responsible thing," Derrick Quirin said.

"We didn't have quite enough saved up," Bekah Quirin added.

Having a child lent a new urgency to the adventure. For one thing, they figured they had a brief window before Ellie became too heavy to carry for such a distance.

Taking a longer-term perspective, the Quirins said they are all too aware of the pressures on wilderness areas across the country. They wanted Ellie to have at least some of the experience they'd had in undeveloped forests and mountains.

"I don't want her to miss that. And I don't know where it'll be when she's old enough" to hike and camp on her own, Derrick Quirin said.

If the Quirins complete the trail in a year from their start date, they will qualify as through-hikers. And while Ellie won't be the youngest through-hiker - "She's not hiking," Derrick Quirin is quick to point out - the Quirins think that she will be the youngest person to travel the trail's 2,190 miles.

The three Quirins are scheduled to set off Monday morning from the McAfee Knob parking lot in Roanoke County. But instead of heading north toward the much-photographed overlook, the Quirins plan to walk south, opposite the seasonal direction taken by most through-hikers.

When they reach the trail's southern end in Georgia, they will drive to Maine, the other end of the 14-state pathway, and start south again. The Quirins hope to average 12 miles per day, a pace that would have them completing the entire trail in six months.

But there will be days that they take off from walking, they know. If all goes well, the Quirins figure they will reach their starting point again by Christmas.

And if it gets cold earlier than it did this year and some walking remains to be done in 2018, so be it — "We're not being so strict on ourselves. . . It's more about the experience of doing it than any titles," Derrick Quirin said.

The biggest challenges on a long hike is the physical "accumulation of small things" - like blisters or sore muscles that can take on larger dimensions as when hiking day after day, Derrick Quirin believes.

As for larger threats, the risks of harm on the trail are probably less than what most people face driving in regular traffic, he said.

Bekah Quirin said that as much as possible, she and her husband would keep up with weather reports on their phones and get off the trail to a motel if a big storm seemed to be approaching.

"We're just going to be hyper-aware," she said.

With less than two days remaining before the journey's start, the Quirins listed some of the preparations they'd made.

The family had packed boxes with two to six days of food — about 5,000 calories per adult per day, with a daily 500 calories added for Bekah Quirin to support breast-feeding. There were freeze-dried adult meals and baby food, oatmeal, noodles and more — "a lot, a lot, a lot of granola and granola bars," Bekah Quirin said.

Also in the boxes were disposable diaper inserts for Ellie. "We'll obviously pack out the dirty diapers," Derrick Quirin said.

Relatives are to hand-deliver the care packages every few days for the first few weeks of travel. After that the boxes would be mailed to post offices along the trail.

The Quirins plan to carry a super-lightweight, three-person tent that uses their trekking poles as supports. Ellie's gear wasn't much more than her clothes, her stirrup-equipped backpack carrier and a pad for diaper changes.

Much of the Quirins' food and some of their gear was supplied by about 25 sponsors, mostly national outfitters. The Quirins said they plan to highlight each sponsor for about two weeks in their online posts.

To prepare for the trip, the Quirins said they saved money for a year and sold many of their possessions, including a car and their house in South Carolina. They moved in with Bekah Quirin's parents in Blue Ridge in November.

They did hikes with Ellie first riding in a chest-carrier, then moving to a backpack as she grew.

The journey ahead would be about family bonding, Derrick Quirin said.

But he hoped it would inspire others as well.

"Our hope is just to encourage families and parents to get out and do something," he said.

In Their Opinion

Wisconsin road funding falls short

Few of us want to increase our tax burden, but Wisconsin's transportation infrastructure is in need of our support.

Gov. Scott Walker's 2017-19 proposed budget, according to a Wisconsin Public Radio story, "would increase local road aid, it would delay some state projects and borrow roughly $500 million to close out a roughly $1 billion deficit."

During a visit to Eau Claire, Lt. Gov. Rebecca Kleefisch said the proposed transportation budget features a "low level of bonding" and added that "they didn't elect us to raise taxes." That may be true, but the plan does not provide a long-term, sustainable solution for transportation needs.

"I would not be surprised if they kind of start over," said Craig Thompson, Transportation Development Association of Wisconsin executive director, who described transportation funding in the budget as "woefully inadequate" and less than what was allocated in the last biennium.

It's time for our representatives to strongly consider increases in user taxes and fees to fund transportation needs.

The woes of roads and bridges in this state are well documented. In rankings by U.S. News & World Report, Wisconsin was 49th in road quality as 42 percent of them (more than double the national average) were deemed in poor or mediocre condition in 2016.

"Transportation revenues have increased modestly in recent years, while the cost of state highway projects has grown from original estimates," reads a Wisconsin Taxpayers Alliance news release. "State road aids to local governments have increased little over the past decade, leading to a decline in local road quality."

"The governor's proposed budget addresses some of these issues but not others. He requests no increases in major taxes and fees."

That's a mistake. Neither the gas tax in Wisconsin nor vehicle registration fees have kept up with inflation.

The public is mixed on the issue, but only 3 percent of respondents to a Marquette University Law School poll released last week favored more borrowing for transportation, a significant component of Walker's proposed budget.

The Legislative Fiscal Bureau found the state was spending 18.2 cents of every dollar of transportation revenue to pay off old borrowing, reads a WPR story, which likely will "grow even higher in the next budget."

According to a 2014 Wisconsin Taxpayers Alliance report, "Filling Potholes: A New Look at Funding Local Transportation in Wisconsin," the average annual growth of gas taxes and vehicle registration fees averaged just 0.3 percent over the previous five years.

"Changing driving patterns and rising fuel efficiency makes future prospects even more dim," states the report, which said transportation funding could be short between $2 billion and $6 billion over the next decade. That's particularly troubling in what the report calls a "transportation-dependent economy."

"Manufacturing, farming and trucking claim a larger share of employment and wages here than in any other state, save Indiana," it says. "In addition, good roads boost Wisconsin's $11 billion tourist industry."

Other options include implementing toll roads and collecting sales tax from vehicles and automotive parts. However, the former would require clearing some legal hurdles, and the latter would take money away from the state's general fund.

Thompson anticipates some changes in the transportation budget before the proposed measure becomes law.

"I think they'll probably come up with more money to throw at it," he said, "but my fear is it will be a one-time thing."

That's a concern for us as well.

What Woodrow Wilson set in motion

The American president was a romantic, a visionary, even a utopian. He was not without flaws; his racial views were offensive for his time, repugnant for ours. But he believed in human rights and the sanctity of human life. And he had a broad view of natural rights, and they included the freedom of the seas and the virtue of national self-determination. It was a toxic brew of ideas and ideals — it would produce rhetorical majesty and personal and national tragedy — but on April 2, 1917, he delivered the most important speech of his life, perhaps the most important speech of his time.

The son of a preacher, the product of Johns Hopkins and Princeton, a scholar and reformer, an introvert and an inveterate golfer, Woodrow Wilson strode to the podium of the House of Representatives that day, summoned every corpuscle of compassion and every calorie of energy he possessed, and bid the United States to abandon a century-and-a-quarter-old tradition of abstinence from the affairs of Europe and to join the Great War.

"It is a fearful thing to lead this great peaceful people into war, into the most terrible and disastrous of all wars, civilization itself seeming to be in the balance. But the right is more precious than peace, and we shall fight for the things which we have always carried nearest our hearts — for democracy, for the right of those who submit to authority to have a voice in their own governments, for the rights and liberties of small nations, for a universal dominion of right by such a concert of free peoples as shall bring peace and safety to all nations and make the world itself at last free."

These were brave words at a time when Russia was in revolutionary tumult, Europe was in exhaustion and despair, and the conflict across the Atlantic seemed far away.

The immediate implication was clear. Americans would travel beyond their home regions for the first time, and they, and the country they returned to when the war ended the following year, would be transformed forever: more worldly, more engaged in the world, and more regarded as an essential element in world affairs. World War I, as it came to be known after there was a second one, made a world of difference.

"The war made America more urban, more modern, more devoted to pleasure, licit and illicit," wrote Will Englund in his new book, "March 1917." It also made America committed to fighting dangerous foes and ideas on foreign lands, lest their evils — Nazi genocide, Soviet tyranny and aggression, al-Qaida terror — reach our own land.

None of that was known when the 28th president opened his remarks. What was known was that the economic output of the United States had just surpassed that of the British Empire — an important fact for this war and for the following one — and that whether it remained on the sidelines in the war or moved to the center of the European conflict, the United States was moving to the center of global affairs.

"Henceforth, down to the beginning of the 21st century, American economic might would be the decisive factor in the shaping of the world order," the historian Adam Tooze would write in his 2014 book, "The Deluge," perhaps the most imaginative and insightful interpretation of World War I in a generation. Tooze, a Briton who teaches at Columbia, argued that Wilson wanted peace without victory — one of the president's signature phrases — to assure that the United States "emerged as the truly undisputed arbiter of world affairs."

That is a matter of substantial scholarly debate, but what is beyond debate is that Wilson's war speech marked a significant inflection point in American life and politics. And, as presidents do when setting the nation on a course of conflict, Wilson spoke the language of grandeur and moral heroism — grandeur and heroism that would be debased in the sodden, contaminated trenches of wartime Europe.

"Just because we fight without rancor and without selfish object, seeking nothing for ourselves but what we shall wish to share with all free peoples, we shall, I feel confident, conduct our operations as belligerents without passion and ourselves observe with proud punctilio the principles of right and of fair play we profess to be fighting for."

Not everyone wanted to enter this war. The isolationist Sen. William E. Borah of Idaho warned that once the United States was "in the maelstrom of European politics," it would be "impossible to get out." Even a few years of Warren Harding-inspired "normalcy" wouldn't disprove the Borah contention. The president knew that.

"Wilson knew full well war's awful consequences, and he was keenly aware of the terrible risk he was taking," wrote John Milton Cooper Jr., the University of Wisconsin historian and Wilson biographer. "Yet given his temperament, it would have been nearly impossible for him not to choose war."

The president concluded his remarks to Congress this way:

"To such a task we can dedicate our lives and our fortunes, everything that we are and everything that we have, with the pride of those who know that the day has come when America is privileged to spend her blood and her might for the principles that gave her birth and happiness and the peace which she has treasured. God helping her, she can do no other."

That last sentence was an adaptation of the famous exhortation of Martin Luther. "Mr. President," said Sen. Henry Cabot Lodge, "you have expressed in the loftiest manner possible, the sentiments of the American people." Two years later the Massachusetts Republican would defeat the president's plan for American entry into the League of Nations.

One of the 50 House members who voted against entering the war was Rep. Jeannette Rankin of Montana, a pacifist and the first woman to serve in Congress. Decades later, she returned for a second term, and was the only lawmaker to oppose entering World War II. In her late 80s, she would lead a march against the Vietnam War.

The great British historian A.J.P. Taylor once reflected on the European turmoil of 1848 and said that "German history reached its turning point and failed to turn." The United States reached its turning point in 1917, and turned.

their two kids compete in eight races between them.

Moon said Blackjack made eight features for the riders to navigate, but with the amount of manmade snow on the mountain this year, the resort did not really have to do too much prep for the race. The manmade snow is so much more dense than natural snow that it really facilitates late season riding.

The event brought 120 riders to Blackjack, which is a similar number as last year according to Moon. They were hoping for more, but with the uncertain conditions, some riders stayed away. Blackjack saw about 150 people staying for the weekend on site, which was a nice boost to late season sales.

Barry Bolich said the change this year of the trails to include Blackjack and Indianhead, really made a big difference and opened up new avenues for the resorts to service the public. Bolich said John Cox, from the Township, has been instrumental in working with the resorts to make the area even more trail and rider friendly, which brings in a considerable amount of revenue in local sales and services.

The Daily Globe talked about racing with Andy Wenzlaff, 25 and unmarried, who is a pro from Stevens Point, Wis. Wenzlaff's usual riding partner got married last year and this event at Blackjack was the first and only race his partner made. Wenzlaff on the other hand, is still making 10 or more events every year.

Wenzlaff described the racing circuit in such a way that it sounds much like rodeo life out west. The riders work hard Monday through Thursday, Wenzlaff is a computer programmer, then drive all Thursday night to get to the event for Friday registration and practice. The competitors race Saturday and Sunday and then back to work, tired as a dog on Monday morning.

Wenzlaff described the majority of the professional riders as being younger, making it clear he feels snowmobile racing is a young man's game. The warm temperatures did not affect the sleds according to Wenzlaff because they are fuel injected. In fact, Wenzlaff said he loved the warm weather because he would not get cold racing.

The cross country track was approximately two miles long, looping up and around the different slopes and ski trails on BlackJack mountain. Wenzlaff placed second in the Pro Factory 600, which was a ten lap, wrist killing, twenty mile race.

St. John's Lutheran Church serves up oven pancakes

IRONWOOD — The St. John's Lutheran Church of Ironwood held a Kropsua breakfast on Sunday morning.

This is the second year that the church has held the event. Kropsua is a traditional Finnish oven cake that is much like a pancake.

"Our church has a strong Finnish background. The church itself was actually built in part by Finnish immigrants," said parishioner Cortney Ofstad. "We wanted to get back to those roots by paying homage to them while also raising money to keep the church open."

Aside from kropsua, the church also served pancakes, sausage, coffee and juice, while having a bake sale with everything from fresh homemade bread and other baked goods. "A lot of people come who have never tried kropsua before," said

Ofstead.

Proceeds from the event are put towards general upkeep and functioning of the church such as maintenance and covering bills. "We're grateful members of the community are coming out today and showing their continued support," said Ofstad.

The kropsua breakfast is one of two fundraisers that the church puts on each year. They will hold their traditional pie social in the fall.

The foundation has to raise its own funds in addition to the funds created in its endowment, otherwise it will not last. The GRHF is planning its own fundraiser June 25 at the Cold Iron Brewery. There is scheduled live music and raffles with the hope to raise $10,000.

Freedom Caucus, White House feud not dissipating

WASHINGTON (AP) — A top adviser to President Donald Trump has urged the defeat of a Michigan congressman and member of a conservative group of U.S. House lawmakers who derailed the White House on legislation to repeal and replace the Obama-era health care law.

Government ethics lawyers said the tweet by White House social media director Dan Scavino Jr. violated federal law that limits political activity by government employees. The White House denied Scavino had run afoul of the law.

Two days after Trump himself tweeted a threat to the conservative House Freedom Caucus, a group of fellow Republicans, Scavino followed up Saturday by singling out Rep. Justin Amash, R-Mich., for criticism and urging Trump supporters to defeat the congressman in next year's primary election.

Scavino tweeted that Trump "is bringing auto plants & jobs back to Michigan" and Amash "is a big liability," adding: "#TrumpTrain, defeat him in primary."

Amash, who began serving his fourth House term in January, responded by retweeting Scavino and adding: "Trump admin & Establishment have merged into #Trumpstablishment. Same old agenda: Attack conservatives, libertarians & independent thinkers."

Another Freedom Caucus member criticized by Trump, Rep. Jim Jordan of Ohio, said the GOP health care legislation was not only poorly done, but rushed, broadly unpopular and opposed by moderates as well as conservatives. "Tweets and statements and blame don't change facts," he said Sunday on CNN's "State of the Union."

"Let's start over," he said. "Even the president said we can get a better bill after it was postponed a week ago."

Ethics lawyers who worked for both Republican and Democratic presidents said Scavino violated the Hatch Act, a federal law that limits political activity by government employees. They said it didn't matter that Scavino tweeted from an account marked as "personal" and not from his official government Twitter account.

Republicans draft bills target local school referendums

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — Republican lawmakers who say school districts ask taxpayers for too much additional funding are seeking to rein in school referendums in a package of bills circulated this week.

But critics say the measures make it hard for schools to keep up with the rising costs of educating students and diminish local control, the Wisconsin State Journal reported.

The bills were being circulated for additional co-sponsors days before voters are set to weigh in on more than a half a billion dollars' worth of projects statewide, which Sen. Ducey Stroebel, R-Saukville, said prompted him to author five of the six bills.

"I believe there is more harm being done to our tax climate via school referendum than anyone realizes," Stroebel told the State Journal. "If everything passed, next year property taxes in Wisconsin would be $63 million higher just from operating (referendums) this election."

Among the bills are measures that would prevent districts from asking voters to raise taxes permanently and cause districts who bring in more money through property taxes and state funding than state-imposed revenue limits to lose state funding.

But school administrators and advocates say his proposals take away local districts' control and ignore the fact that voters have been increasingly supportive of school district referendums in recent years.

"Through tight budgets and changing political winds, Wisconsinites have consistently voted to raise their own taxes to support their local public schools," Department of Public Instruction Superintendent Tony Evers told the State Journal.

School boards could only ask voters to approve spending and building projects in spring and fall general elections under one proposal. Others would require school boards to vote on seeking referendums at regular meetings and only allow them to vote on referendums that issue debt at their annual meetings.

Another would require school boards to include the cost of debt and interest in the referendum amounts presented to voters.

Another would provide 50 percent matching state funds for districts that set aside money they receive under their revenue limits in a fund for maintenance and construction projects. If the district seeks a referendum within 10 years of using the matching funds from the state, the money is reimbursed to the state through a reduction in the district's state aid.

Kim Kaukl, executive director of the Wisconsin Rural Schools Alliance, said in a statement the bills would be "damaging" to public education, especially in rural areas still hurting from cuts to state aid.

Detroit schools, state consider deal to avoid closures

DETROIT (AP) — Detroit school officials are attempting to partner with state universities to assist with turnaround efforts at 24 city schools to prevent state-mandated closures.

The plan involves Eastern Michigan University, the University of Michigan, Michigan State University and Wayne State University, according to the Michigan Department of Education. The four institutions would help set "high but attainable" goals at two dozen city schools that had been targeted by the state for closure, improving academic achievement and decreasing chronic absenteeism and teacher vacancies.

Goals will be evaluated after 18 months and again in 36 months, state officials said.

The proposed agreement allows Detroit officials to keep control over the fate of their schools, according to State Superintendent Brian Whiston.

"The district owns it: its teachers, parents, administrators, they all own this," he said. "For this to work, they all must be part of this solution."

Whiston discussed the plan Thursday at a meeting with Detroit Public Schools Community District officials, school board members, teachers, parents and representatives from the Wayne Regional Education Service Agency.

"I'm pleased with the progress by the district and it's headed in the right direction," he said in a statement. "For a partnership agreement to work, it's going to take a true collaboration."

The scholarship is supported by annual fund-raisers.

Milwaukee school district approves 'safe haven' designation

MILWAUKEE (AP) — The Milwaukee Public Schools Board has approved a resolution designating the district as a "safe haven" for students and families who are living in the country illegally.

Board members said before they voted that they wanted to ease the fears of students and their families because of President Donald Trump's directive to crack down on illegal immigration. They voted 8-0 Thursday night to approve the resolution, drawing a standing ovation from a crowd of students, parents and teachers.

The resolution prohibits school staff, volunteers, and contractors from using district resources to facilitate the arrest of people in the country illegally. It also establishes steps to take if immigration enforcement agents try to enter a school, the Milwaukee Journal Sentinel (<http://bit.ly/2opajyX>) reported.

"In my life, I have some high points I can feel good about, but I can say that this evening, and meeting with the students who supported this resolution, has had a powerful effect on me," said Wendell Harris, a board member. "I will fight for you and for the rights of undocumented people, in honor of the slaves who worked to help build this country."

School districts around the country have been establishing guidelines to protect students and their families from immigration enforcement actions.

Superintendent Darienne Driver endorsed the measure and spoke to the students in the crowd.

CHAPTER FIVE

Written by Carolyn Mueller
Illustrated by Christopher Grant

One sunny afternoon, Sam took Jim to town to show off his intelligence.

"You need to see how smart my dog is," he told people.

Sam told the story of how Jim had identified the trees and how he had always been a perfect hunting companion. He was met with doubt.

"I'm sure he's a great dog, Sam," they said. "But he's just a dog. He doesn't actually understand what you're asking."

"I'll prove it," Sam said.

Sam's friends were gathered in town, and a few of them had cars parked just down the street.

"Jim," Sam said to his dog. "Go and show this man which car is his."

My father looked calmly at his owner, then trotted over and placed his paw on the correct car, just as he'd done to the trees. Everyone was shocked.

"If he's so smart," one man said, "let me give you the license number of my car, and let's see if he can find it."

Sam wasn't so sure. He'd didn't know if Jim knew anything about numbers! The man wrote the numbers 19-248 on a piece of paper. Sam showed it to my father.

"Jim," he said. "This man has a car with these numbers on the plate. Can you find it?"

One quick glance and Jim was off! He ran right over to the man's car and put his paw on the plate! He then looked at the group as if to say, "See."

"I don't believe it!" Mr. Van Arsdale's friends said.

"He's amazing!"

"He's unbelievable!"

Soon, word spread of my father's abilities. Those were the first cars Jim was asked to identify, but he once told me that in his lifetime he correctly identified more than 1,000 vehicles! The people in town asked Sam to test Jim in other ways.

"Jim, show me a man with a red necktie."

"Jim, show me a man with a black mustache."

"Jim, show me a woman in a blue dress. Or white gloves. Or a yellow hat."

Question after question was thrown at him, and he always got them right, completing each task with ease.

Word of the Wonder Dog spread quickly.

Sam owned the Ruff Hotel in Marshall, and it was there that Jim gave many performances demonstrating his abilities.

Sometimes Sam and Jim would leave the room and everyone would agree upon a task for the dog to complete upon return. When my father got back, all his owner had to say was, "Jim, do what they were talking about while we were gone." Jim would complete the task! Sometimes it would be to identify a certain person or object. Either way, Jim always got it right.

People constantly tried to fool Jim. Sometimes questions were tricky. For example, when asked, "Jim, if we had some money we wanted to keep where the famous gangster, Al Capone, couldn't get it, where would we put it?" Jim went right to the safe and placed his paw on the door!

Each time a crowd saw Jim perform, people commented on my father's eyes. Jim had big, chocolate brown eyes, like any Llewelin Setter, but there was something different there too. Anyone who met him could see real intelligence reflected in his eyes. It was as if this dog truly could understand.

ALEX THE PARROT

Another animal in history able to correctly identify colors and objects was Alex the parrot. Alex was an African grey parrot owned by a researcher named Irene Pepperberg. When Irene began her work with Alex, people thought that an animal needed a large primate brain to understand language—like humans or gorillas. But Alex, a tiny bird, demonstrated what Irene called a "two way communication code."

Alex could identify 50 different objects and recognize quantities up to six. He could tell the difference between seven colors, five shapes and multiple sizes. Since parrots can mimic the sound of human language, Alex could say 100 English words!

Of course, like Koko, Hans and Jim, Alex was met with doubt. Maybe the parrot was another case of training or the "Clever Hans Effect"? Still, people were amazed at Alex's ability to communicate and identify objects with ease.

PAPER TRAINING

Jim was a pro at identifying vehicles. Find used cars for sale in your newspaper. Create a bar graph representing the types of cars for sale.

SUSPECTS SOUGHT

CHICAGO POLICE Department Superintendent Eddie Johnson stands with 10th District officers as he talks with reporters about charging the first of several juvenile offenders from the March 19 criminal sexual assault incident broadcast on Facebook, during a press conference Sunday, at the City of Chicago Public Safety Headquarters.

Chicago police seek 2nd teen in Facebook sexual assault case

CHICAGO (AP) — An arrest warrant has been issued for a second teenage boy in the sexual assault of a 15-year-old Chicago girl that was streamed live on Facebook, and further arrests are expected, police said Sunday.

A day after announcing the arrest of a 14-year-old boy on sexual assault and child pornography charges, police said they were looking for a 15-year-old suspect in the March 19 attack, which investigators have said involved five or six males. Investigators didn't specify how many others would likely be charged, but they did say one adult male was among them.

Police were careful not to release too many details of the ongoing investigation, but they did provide some that helped illustrate why Superintendent Eddie Johnson remained visibly upset as he has been since the investigation began.

Commander Brendan Deenihan said that the victim saw one of the suspects, whom she knew, on the day of the attack. She said the suspect "lured" her into the home of one of the offenders in the North Lawndale neighborhood on the city's West Side, where she also lives.

"She was not allowed to leave and she did not consent to what occurred," he said.

Police spokesman Anthony Guglielmi said the girl was threatened by suspects, but he would not say what those threats entailed.

Deenihan also said there were multiple cellphone videos made of the attack, not just the one streamed live on Facebook that was viewed by about 40 people — none of whom reported it.

"It disgusts me that we have people who would look at those videos and not pick up a phone and dial 911," he said.

Deenihan declined to say if either of the teens who are already facing charges streamed the live video. But the charges against the 14-year-old — aggravated criminal sexual assault, manufacturing of child pornography and dissemination of child pornography — suggest that he shot video or took photographs of the attack, Guglielmi said.

Last month, the girl's mother told The Associated Press that her daughter received online threats following the attack and that neighborhood kids were ringing her doorbell looking for the girl, who hasn't returned to the neighborhood. On Sunday, Deenihan said police were investigating what he called "social media bullying" and that detectives have "executed social media search warrants" in the case.

He said the girl is traumatized and reluctant to talk about the attack, and that she's going to need help for a long time. After the news conference, Guglielmi said city officials and the Cook County State's Attorney's office have relocated the girl to a "safe place," but he declined to elaborate.

With Trump approval, Pentagon expands warfighting authority

WASHINGTON (AP) — Week by week, country by country, the Pentagon is quietly seizing more control over warfighting decisions, sending hundreds more troops to war with little public debate and seeking greater authority to battle extremists across the Middle East and Africa.

This week it was Somalia, where President Donald Trump gave the U.S. military more authority to conduct offensive airstrikes on al-Qaida-linked militants. Next week it could be Yemen, where military leaders want to provide more help for the United Arab Emirates' battle against Iranian-backed rebels. Key decisions on Iraq, Syria and Afghanistan are looming, from ending troop number limits to loosening rules that guide commanders in the field.

The changes in Trump's first two months in office underscore his willingness to let the Pentagon manage its own day-to-day combat. Under the Obama administration, military leaders chafed about micromanagement that included commanders needing approval for routine tactical decisions about targets and personnel moves.

But delegating more authority to the Pentagon — and combat decisions to lower level officers — carries its own military and political risks. Casualties, of civilians and American service members, may be the biggest.

The deepening involvement in counterinsurgency battles, from the street-by-street battles being fought in Iraq right now to clandestine raids in Yemen and elsewhere, increases the chances of U.S. troops dying. Such tragedies could raise the ire of the American public and create political trouble with Congress at a time when the Trump administration is trying to finish off the Islamic State group in Iraq and Syria and broaden efforts against similarly inspired groups.

Similarly, allowing lower level commanders to make more timely airstrike decisions in densely populated areas like the streets of Mosul, Iraq, can result in more civilian deaths. The U.S. military already is investigating several bombings in Mosul in mid-March that witnesses say killed at least 100 people. And it is considering new tactics and precautions amid evidence suggesting extremists are smuggling civilians into buildings and then baiting the U.S.-led coalition into attacking.

Alice Hunt Friend, a senior fellow at the Center for Strategic and International Studies, cited yet another concern: Military operations becoming "divorced from overall foreign policy" could make both civilian leaders and the military vulnerable to runaway events.

"Political leaders can lose control of military campaigns," she warned.

But top military leaders say they need to be able to act quicker against U.S. enemies. And they've been staunchly supported by Trump, who has promised to pursue Islamic extremists more aggressively and echoed the view of Pentagon leaders that the Obama administration's tight control over military operations limited effectiveness.

Explaining his request for more leeway in Somalia against al-Shabab militants, Gen. Thomas Waldhauser, head of U.S. Africa Command, told Congress this month that more flexibility and "timeliness" in decision-making process was necessary.

Approved by Trump on Wednesday, it was hardly the first military expansion.

The Defense Department has quietly doubled the number of U.S. forces in Syria. It has moved military advisers closer to front lines in Iraq. It has publicly made the case for more troops in Afghanistan.

The White House is tentatively scheduled this coming week to discuss providing intelligence, refueling and other assistance to U.A.E. as it fights Houthi rebels in Yemen, according to officials who weren't authorized to speak about a confidential meetings and demanded anonymity.

Some changes are happening with little fanfare. While there is limited American appetite for large-scale deployments in Iraq and Syria, additions are coming incrementally, in the hundreds of forces, not the thousands.

The result may be confusing for the public. Trump hasn't eliminated Obama's troop number limits. Thus, the caps of 503 for Syria and 5,262 for Iraq are still in effect.

But the military is ignoring them with White House approval and using an already-existing loophole to categorize deployments as temporary. For example, several hundred Marines and soldiers were recently sent to Syria to assist U.S.-backed Syria forces, including in the fight to retake IS' self-declared capital of Raqqa. All were deemed temporary so not counted against the cap.

Destroyer's name honors aviator who tried to save comrade

BATH, Maine (AP) — Naval aviator Thomas Hudner watched helplessly as a fellow fighter pilot's plane turned into a death trap after a crash-landing behind enemy lines during the Korean War. The injured pilot was pinned in the cockpit, unable to escape from the burning plane.

The lieutenant did the only thing he could to help: He crash-landed his own plane, climbed out and tried to save his comrade, Ensign Jesse Brown.

"What Tom did is one of the greatest feats of bravery in any war," said Adam Makos, who wrote a book about the aviator called "Devotion."

The 92-year-old Medal of Honor recipient watched Saturday as the future USS Thomas Hudner was christened during a snowstorm at Bath Iron Works in Maine.

The wet and cold spectators included Hudner's wife, Georgea, one of the ship's sponsors, their children and other family members. Brown's daughter and two brothers were also there. Also on hand were two other Medal of Honor recipients, along with Marine Corps veterans who credited naval aviators for saving their skin during the Battle of Chosin Reservoir, where both enemy bullets and brutal cold claimed the lives of Marines.

"Without the fighter pilots, we wouldn't be here today," said John "Red" Parkinson, a Marine corporal during the battle who commented that the snowy weather seemed appropriate.

The ceremony celebrated heroism — and friendship.

Brown was the African-American son of sharecroppers in Mississippi who became the first black aviator in the U.S. Navy. Hudner, who's white, was a U.S. Naval Academy graduate and son of a well-to-do grocery store owner in Massachusetts. The two squadron mates hit it off despite their differences.

Fletcher Brown, one of Jesse's brothers, said both men were driven and loved to fly. "From what I know about Tom and what I know about Jesse, they were probably two of a kind. The only difference is one was wealthy and one was a cotton picker," he said.

On the fateful mission, on Dec. 4, 1950, the two flew from the aircraft carrier USS Leyte to protect outnumbered Marines who were encircled by Chinese soldiers.

Brown's gull-winged Corsair began leaking oil after being struck by ground fire, and he crash-landed on a snowy mountainside in enemy territory. Brown survived the hard landing but suffered injuries and was trapped inside the burning airplane.

Circling overhead, Hudner saw that Brown was unable to escape. So Hudner did a wheels-up belly landing in his own plane and ran to his friend's aid.

It was a race against time. If the crash injuries or the flames didn't claim Brown, then the bitter cold surely would. The temperature was just above zero.

There was no happy ending, however.

Neither Hudner nor the crew of a rescue helicopter could free Brown despite taking an ax to the plane. Brown lost consciousness.

"An aviator is calculating by nature and all he had to do was look around to know he wasn't coming home. That's when he glanced up at me and said his last words, 'Just tell Daisy how much I love her,'" Hudner said before the event, referencing Brown's wife.

Hudner promised to return, and he did return years later. But Brown's remains were never found.

IN THIS handout photo released by the Colombian National Army, soldiers rescue a child in Mocoa, Colombia, Saturday, after an avalanche of water from an overflowing river swept through the city as people slept. The incident triggered by intense rains left at least 100 people dead in Mocoa, located near Colombia's border with Ecuador.

Colombia: 193 dead after rivers overflow, toppling homes

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — An avalanche of water from three overflowing rivers tore through a small city in Colombia while people slept, destroying homes, sweeping away cars and killing at least 193 unsuspecting residents.

The incident triggered by a sudden, heavy rainstorm happened around midnight Friday and into early Saturday in Mocoa, a provincial capital of about 40,000 tucked between mountains near Colombia's southern border with Ecuador.

Muddy water quickly surged through the city's streets, toppling homes, ripping trees from their roots and carrying a torrent of rocks and debris downstream. Many residents did not have enough time to flee.

According to the Red Cross, 202 people were injured and 220 believed missing. President Juan Manuel Santos declared a state of emergency and said the death toll will likely rise but warned against speculating about how many are dead. Late Saturday, he said the toll had reached 193.

"We don't know how many there are going to be," he said of the fatalities when he arrived at the disaster zone to oversee rescue efforts. "We're still looking."

Eduardo Vargas, 29, was asleep with his wife and 7-month-old baby when he was awoken by the sound of neighbors banging on his door. He quickly grabbed his family and fled up a small mountain amid the cries of people in panic.

"There was no time for anything," he said.

Vargas and his family huddled with about two dozen other residents as rocks, trees and wooden planks ripped through their neighborhood below. They waited there until daylight, when members of the military helped them down.

When he reached the site of his home Saturday, nothing his family left behind remained.

"Thank God we have our lives," he said.

As rescuers assessed the full scope of the damage, many residents in Mocoa continued a desperate search for friends and relatives.

Oscar Londono tried in vain throughout the night to reach his wife's parents, whose home is right along one of the flooded rivers. He decided it was too dangerous to try to reach them in the dark. So he called over and over by phone but got no answer.

Once the sun began to rise he started walking toward their house but found all the streets he usually takes missing. As he tried to orient himself he came across the body of a young woman dressed in a mini-skirt and black blouse.

He checked her pulse but could not find one.

"There were bodies all over," he said.

When he finally reached the neighborhood where his in-laws live he found "just mud and rocks." Rescue workers with the military oriented him toward the mountain, where he found his relatives camped with other survivors.

"To know they were alive," he said, "it was a reunion of tears."

Santos said at least 22 people were seriously injured and being airlifted to nearby cities, as the small regional hospital in Mocoa struggled to cope with the magnitude of the crisis. Herman Granados, an anesthesiologist, said he worked throughout the night on victims, cleaning wounds. He said the hospital doesn't have a blood bank large enough to deal with the number of patients and was quickly running out of its supply.

Some of the hospital workers came to help even while there are own relatives remained missing.

"Under the mud," Granados said, "I am sure there are many more."

The Red Cross planned to set up a special unit in Mocoa Saturday afternoon to help relatives search for their loved ones.

"In this moment, it's chaos," said Oscar Forero, a spokesman with the Colombian Red Cross. "There are many people missing."

Rescuers suspended the search late Saturday night due to darkness but vowed to continue at first light Sunday.

Santos blamed climate change for triggering the avalanche, saying that the accumulated rainfall in one night was almost half the amount Mocoa normally receives in the entire month of March. With the rainy season in much of Colombia just beginning, he said local and national authorities need to redouble their efforts to prevent a similar tragedy.

The crisis is likely to be remembered as one of the worst natural disasters in recent Colombian history, though the Andean nation has experienced even more destructive catastrophes. Nearly 25,000 people were killed in 1985 after the Nevado del Ruiz volcano erupted and triggered a deluge of mud and debris that buried the town of Armero.

Birthday surprise for ageless Doris Day: She's actually 95

LOS ANGELES (AP) — To Doris Day's many admirers, the pert and fresh-faced charmer who starred in "Pillow Talk" and "Move Over Darling" is ageless.

But Day turns 95 on Monday — which is a birthday surprise to even the star herself, who has long pegged her age to a 1924 birthdate that would make her 93. Media outlets have variously reported her as between 93 and 95.

A copy of Day's birth certificate, obtained by The Associated Press from Ohio's Office of Vital Statistics, settles the issue: Doris Mary Kappelhoff, her pre-name, was born on April 3, 1922, making her 95. Her parents were Alma and William Kappelhoff of Cincinnati.

"I've always said that age is just a number and I have never paid much attention to birthdays, but it's great to finally know how old I really am!" Day said in a statement Sunday.

Hurley loses home opener

By PAT KRAUSE
sports@yourdailyglobe.com

HURLEY — In its season opener on Saturday morning, the Hurley Midgets could not overcome a big Ashland lead and fell to the Oredockers 20-9 at the Hurley K-12 School.

Both Hurley manager Aaron Bender and Ashland coach Chris Kempf said the game revolved around pitching and base on balls. The game turned into a walk-fest as the teams combined for 26 walks and two hit-batsmen. The Midgets walked 14 hitters and Ashland gave up 12 walks and both teams hit a batter.

"The biggest thing is to find kids who throw strikes," Bender said. "Right now, (Tandrell) Foster gets frustrated out there and starts walking people. We'll work through his problems with him. The young kids just go out and pitch. I was very impressed with Corbin Taylor today, but there were too many walks and passed balls. I was very happy with our hitting. We hit the ball well and that was a positive."

Kempf also stressed pitching is the name of the game in baseball.

"It's all about pitching," Kempf said. "We have a number of back-to-back games coming up, so it's good to get our pitchers out there in game situations. Jordan (Brennan) and Jake (Erickson) threw a lot of balls today and we got our younger kids out on the mound. With pitching, you have to work at it."

"Also, thanks to Hurley for playing a game with us on such short notice. We were supposed to play in Oshkosh today and they cancelled out. Hurley agreed to a game on Friday."

Bender also said he has been "kind of experimenting" with the team's personnel and line-up.

"We have lots of guys back, but we're trying to fit them into the right spots," Bender said.

"We've got our share of young guys, too. We had two freshmen start today and used two freshmen pitchers and a third freshman in right (field). The veterans have to keep the young guys focused on the season, because they'll play a lot."

Ashland loaded the bases in the first inning and then Bo Bratley roped a double into the left-centerfield gap that plated two runs.

The Oredockers stepped up their game in the second inning and stepped up to the plate 13 times.

Foster struggled on the mound and couldn't find the strike zone. After a Hurley error started the inning, Foster walked seven of the next eight batters he faced and then gave up a bases-loaded double to Jordan Thimm that knocked in three runs.

Taylor came into put out the fire, but Ashland scored 10 runs in the inning and took a 12-1 lead.

Hurley then hit the comeback trail with two runs in the third inning.

Colt Tijan walked, took second on a groundout and scored on Natalie Colassaco's line drive over the second baseman's head. Ryley Eitrem and Taylor were issued free passes (walks) and freshman Brayden Bender singled up the middle to bring in Eitrem.

In the fourth inning, the Midgets made the game interesting again when they scored five runs and whittled Ashland's lead to 12-8.

Tanner Nelson led off with a double, Tijan walked for the third time and Dante Bender laced an RBI single. With the bases jammed, back-to-back walks to Colassaco and Eitrem brought in Nelson and Tijan and Justin Sukanen whistled a line drive that the right fielder could not catch up to and three more runs crossed the plate.

The Oredockers put the game on ice with two runs in the fifth inning and six more in the sixth. The game ended in the sixth inning with Ashland on top 20-9 and the 10 run rule went into effect.

Thimm was a perfect 3-3 on the day for the Oredockers and Bratley and Derek Lindenberg went 2-3. Ashland had 12 hits in the game.

Dante Bender led Hurley's hitting attack with a 2-3 day, while Tijan and Eitrem reached base all four times they batted.

Jacob Erickson picked up the win for Ashland going two innings and giving up one run and no hits. He struck out two and issued four walks.

Foster went 1 1/3 innings giving up 11 runs (nine earned) on four hits. The freshmen, Taylor and Jack Santini, pitched 4 2/3 innings of relief.

Ashland is now 2-0 on the new season.

Hurley (0-1) travels to Solon Springs for a game today.

Gonzaga, North Carolina feature beastly bigs in NCAA title game

GLENDALE, Ariz. (AP) — Their pedigrees are different, but both teams are loaded with veterans. Both have some heft in the middle.

When Gonzaga meets North Carolina for the NCAA national championship on Monday night, it could be quite a brawl.

"They're big just like us and they match up with us pretty well," North Carolina's Theo Pinson said. "Their guards are really good. We just got to play the game and execute."

The centers are beastly. Gonzaga (37-1) brings 7-foot-1, 300-pound Przemek Karnowski. He will have 3 inches and 40 pounds on the Tar Heels' 6-10, 260-pound Kennedy Meeks, who may have had the best game of his career in Saturday night's 77-76 win over Oregon.

Meeks matched his career high with 25 points and grabbed 14 rebounds, the last to preserve the victory after the last of North Carolina's four missed free throws in the final 6 seconds.

"Kennedy, I thought, was awesome," Tar Heels coach Roy Williams said. "I thought he controlled everything inside — 25 points, 14 rebounds, 11 of 13 (shooting)."

Karnowski will be a load, as he is with every opponent. He was one of the main reasons that Gonzaga regrouped after blowing a 14-point second half lead to beat South Carolina 77-73.

But the Zags also have 7-foot, 230-pound Zach Collins, whose 3-pointer gave Gonzaga the lead. Collins had 14 points, 13 rebounds and six blocked shots to help propel Gonzaga — in its first Final Four — into the title game.

"I'm really happy for him," Karnowski said. "His work ethic is awesome. He's been playing well for us the entire season. Whenever I go to the bench he gets in, and basically our team doesn't drop a bit. So he's been huge for us."

North Carolina (32-7), the No. 1 seed in the South, will be seeking its sixth national title. Gonzaga, the No. 1 seed in the West, finally has made it after knocking on the door so many times under coach Mark Few.

"I've had some really, really tough teams," Few said. "I've had some really close teams. I've had some teams that have been crazy

White Sox's Quintana ready for opener against Tigers

CHICAGO (AP) — With all the moves the Chicago White Sox made and all the rumors surrounding him, Jose Quintana seemed like a good bet to be traded by now.

Instead, he was leaning against the dugout railing, surrounded by microphones and notepads.

On Monday, he'll start his first season opener when the White Sox meet Justin Verlander and the Detroit Tigers.

"My future is the present. It's the present," Quintana said Sunday. "My future is here. I have to just control this year. I pay attention to right now. I'm focusing on the 2017 season and helping my team. I'm happy here and that's it. Just focus on the present."

The White Sox made some big changes coming off a 78-84 season, starting with their philosophy.

They decided it was time to rebuild after four straight losing seasons. That meant trading ace Chris Sale and outfielder Adam Eaton for young players management hopes will jolt a franchise with just one playoff appearance since the 2005 championship season. Plus, they hired a new manager — Rick Renteria is in, Robin Ventura is out.

The work is only beginning. Third baseman Todd Frazier and closer David Robertson could be dealt, but their biggest question at the moment is how much longer the guy who will start the opener will be around.

Quintana posted a career-high 3.20 ERA and made his first All-Star team last year. He has four straight seasons with at least 200 innings. Throw in a club-friendly contract that keeps him under team control through 2020, and it adds up to an attractive target for suitors.

Quintana said he would like to remain with the White Sox. But he also realizes that's not his decision.

"I don't think he's reached out or even spoken about it to me," said Renteria, who got promoted from bench coach. "His biggest thing is just focusing on preparing for the season. I haven't had any conversations in terms of having to deal with rumors or anything of that nature. He's prepared just like any of the other guys have getting ready for the season. He's a pro and will continue to be that. I don't have any concerns about him being worried about anything else."

The Tigers are in a different position than Chicago, with their eyes on the playoffs after missing the postseason for the second straight year. They finished eight games behind World Series runner-up Cleveland in the AL Central and fell just short of a wild card.

There's been talk of cutting costs after owner Mike Ilitch died at age 87 in February and there could be big changes after this year. But with Verlander coming off a near Cy Young season and sluggers such as Miguel Cabrera and Alex Avila anchoring the lineup, general manager Al Avila sees a team poised to contend with a roster returning largely intact.

"Cleveland obviously is the class of big league baseball right now if not the American League," he said. "But the American League Central division is still very tough. ... But we do feel we have a good team, a team that's going to compete. We really like our starting rotation with the young guys mixed with the veteran guys. We feel we can score some runs."

That might be a little tougher for the first few weeks with right fielder J.D. Martinez, who hit .307 with 22 homers last year, recovering from a sprained right foot. He is expected to have the cast removed on Monday and begin rehabilitation this week.

Avila said the Tigers "will look into" adding outfielder Melvin Upton Jr., maybe on a minor league contract, after he was released by Toronto on Sunday.

"We'll be talking about it as a possibility," Avila said.

Keselowski pulls away and wins at Martinsville

MARTINSVILLE, Va. (AP) — Brad Keselowski passed Kyle Busch with 43 laps to go and pulled away to win for the first time in his career at Martinsville Speedway on Sunday.

The victory was the 23rd for Keselowski, the 2012 Monster Energy NASCAR Cup Series champion, and his second in the first six races of this season. It made him just the eighth active driver with a victory in the top series on NASCAR's oldest and shortest oval.

"We've ran so good here ... but something always happens and we haven't been able to bring it home," Keselowski said in Victory Lane.

"Martinsville is just one of those champion's tracks. The guys that run well everywhere, run good here, and it's really just an honor to win here."

The victory was the first for Ford on the 0.526-mile oval since 2002, and gave Keselowski five straight top-five finishes this year.

Keselowski and Busch swapped the lead several times during a green flag run that began with 64 laps to go.

Keselowski had the lead coming out of a caution, but Busch quickly slipped underneath him to go back in front. Keselowski stalked him for 14 laps, the nose of his Ford inches from the rear bumper of Busch's Toyota.

When he finally got around Busch again, he gradually pulled away, opening a lead of nearly two seconds that helped him when he also had to navigate around lapped traffic. He won by 1.8 seconds.

"All we did was put four tires on, and when we did, it went to junk," Busch said of his car. "I hate it for our guys. They've deserved all year better finishes than what we've been able to produce, and here's another one today. Just frustrating season so far."

Busch led a race-high 274 laps and finished second, followed by Chase Elliott, Joey Logano and Austin Dillon.

It was the first time NASCAR tried its new stage racing on a short track, and it provided some excitement.

Martin Truex Jr. won the first stage in a three-lap sprint to the finish that featured lots of banging in the pack as drivers jostled to make the point-scoring top 10.

Elliott won stage two when Ricky Stenhouse Jr., trying to get back on the lead lap, nudged Busch on the final lap of the stage, getting Busch just loose enough for Elliott to slide underneath him to score the regular season points and coveted playoff point.

Busch said he has no problem with being bumped, as long as the other drivers expect the same treatment in reverse.

"I actually was rolling into Turn 3 and was kind of going higher out of the way and was going to let (Stenhouse) back by and give him the lap," Busch said. "That was my intent, and then he just drove through me and cost me my spot to (Elliott). I was trying to be a nice guy."

UP NEXT
The series heads to repaved Texas, where most drivers will get their first look at the new surface in their first practice.

Walker scores 29; Hornets overcome Westbrook's triple-double

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Desperately needing a victory to stay in the Eastern Conference playoff race, the Charlotte Hornets picked up one in a place they'd never won before.

Kemba Walker scored 29 points to help Charlotte overcome Russell Westbrook's sixth straight triple-double to beat the Oklahoma City Thunder 113-101 on Sunday.

It was the Hornets' first win in Oklahoma City, a place where they'd been 0-8.

Westbrook finished with 40 points, 13 rebounds and 10 assists. It was Westbrook's 40th triple-double of the season, putting him one behind Oscar Robertson's NBA record of 41, set during the 1961-62 season. It was Westbrook's first career triple-double against Charlotte.

Husband's drinking causes problems

Dear Annie

Dear Annie: My husband and I recently put our house on the market and moved to a Southern state to spend our retirement there. I am 64, and he is 73. It is my second marriage and his third. The house went under contract, and I went north to clean up and sell everything. He stayed home with the animals. The house sale fell through, and I am relisting. He wants me to come home and close up the house. I do not want to keep it empty. He cries every night that we talk.

The problem is that I don't miss him. We have been married for eight years. We did not live together before marriage. When we got married, I knew he drank a lot, but I didn't realize that if there is something on his mind while he's drinking he becomes verbally abusive. On average, he verbally abuses me every other week, depending on whether anything is troubling him. He calls me names using bad language. He has severe obsessive-compulsive disorder and sleep apnea. He does not take medication for either. We cannot sleep together because of the apnea.

We do, however, have some mutual likes. Since we moved South, his verbal abuse has decreased. We attended counseling before the move. The counselor said that he needs to stop drinking and that his abuse is alcohol-driven. He will not give up drinking. He hit me once, and I left him; I only agreed to go back with him if we went to counseling.

He has made my life very comfortable, and I have given him the companionship he needs, but there is something missing. We have many friends. I am not destitute, by any means, but my lifestyle would be compromised if I divorced him. I am a very young and active 64-year-old with many hobbies and talents. My physical feelings for him are cold. He treats me like a daughter. He is a good man, and all of his friends tell me what a great catch he is. They know he drinks but think nothing of it. He is a retired state trooper. I am not unhappy with him, but I am not happy, either. Please advise. — Stagnating in the South

Dear Stagnant: It is unacceptable for your husband to abuse you, verbally or physically. Do not downplay the importance of your own well-being. You deserve to feel safe, happy and free. Reach out to counselors at Safe Horizon (800-621-HOPE), who specialize in assisting victims of verbal abuse, for more guidance on the subject, and if he ever physically abuses you again, call 911.

The "something missing" you mention is something that's missing not from your relationship but from your husband. He is deeply troubled, and he needs to find his own path to recovery. You can encourage him to seek help, but you cannot control the outcome. Please consider attending an Al-Anon Family Groups meeting in your town. Try a few different groups. I know; I've recommended the organization about a hundred times in this column. I'm guessing I'll recommend it a hundred thousand times more. It's that helpful.

Dear Annie: I have been a reader of advice columns since approximately 1958, when I first learned to read a newspaper. Ann Landers' column was a huge part of my education in the repressed 1950s!

I want to compliment you on doing a great job. You show compassion and good sense daily. Your printing "B.R.'s" response to "Feeling So Bad" — about how people deal with terminal illness — triggered my note. My mother also cut everyone off during her final illness. I thought it was a mistake, but it was her choice.

And you are clearly a feminist! You don't let men or women get away with much! Just sign me...

— An Older Fan of the Newer Wave

Dear Older: I'm grateful for your readership, and I'll keep working my hardest to earn it.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

EUGENIA LAST

Your Birthday Monday, April 3, 2017

Ease into the things you want to accomplish this year. Work at your own speed and only share when you feel confident that you have everything in place. If you let your uniqueness and sense of style make a statement, your words will have greater meaning when you speak.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Channel your emotions into your work. Get things done behind the scenes and master what you want to pursue. An overreaction will cause problems with relationships.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Discuss your choices with someone you look up to and trust. Learn from people with experience, but thoroughly examine the information offered to you before you choose what works best.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Stay on top of what others say, and get offers or promises in writing. If you want to bring about change, get approval before you begin. Avoid conflicts with partners.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Settle down and refrain from making an erratic move based on hearsay or peer pressure. Channel your energy into creative, innovative ideas and plans that will help you get ahead.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Don't complain or criticize. It's in your best interest to make personal changes. Put more time into learning and applying what you discover to improve your life and future.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — A little give-and-take and sincerity will bring you closer to your family, friends and colleagues. Don't be afraid to be different. Home and health issues should be taken seriously.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) — Don't give up, retreat or let your emotions take control. Keep your feet on the ground and stick to basics. Walk away from excessive people, and don't make compensations.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) — A creative outlet will stimulate your mind and lead to all sorts of new possibilities. Serious discussions and personal changes look rewarding. Excursions and learning are highlighted.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) — Indecisiveness will surface if you can't decide how you feel about someone. Consider the consequences and do your best to quantify the ideal way to move forward.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Don't let others' actions discourage you. Do your own thing and don't feel obligated to take part in something you find risky. Make personal changes that will add to your entertainment options.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) — Don't let the past come back to haunt you. You need to recognize certain insincere gestures of friendliness. Children, institutions and someone using emotional blackmail will try to take advantage of you.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) — Do your thing and stop worrying about what others think. You cannot please everyone, but you can master the art of personal happiness. Show strength and command respect.

Double fits are double the fun
By Phillip Alder
Steve Jobs said, "Quality is more important than quantity. One home run is much better than two doubles."
But if the doubles are back to back, you have one run scored and a man on second. At the bridge table, double fits are much better than single fits. But if your side has a double fit, so do the opponents. Each partnership will be able to win more tricks than the point-count would suggest.
In today's deal, East-West have 17 points and North-South 23, suggesting maybe seven winners for East-West and nine for North-South. But East-West can win 11 tricks in diamonds and North-South 10 in spades. One difference is caused by the location of the heart king. If South held that card, the numbers would change to 10 for East-West and 11 for North-South.
The basic rule for a double fit is: Declare.
In this auction, after a one-diamond opening and one-spade overcall, West might have made a pre-emptive jump to three diamonds if permitted by his system. Over two diamonds, North cue-bid to show at least game-invitational values in spades. Now East, despite only 11 high-card points, showed his second suit. Then South did likewise. These bids permitted both West and North to look more favorably upon their hands, with West leading to five diamonds. North, though, knowing about the double fit, pushed on to five spades.
West led the heart queen. He was nervous that an opponent might be void in diamonds. Then East-West took their tricks for down one.

BENEFITS FROM CALORIE RESTRICTION NOT YET PROVEN LONG TERM
by Robert Ashley, M.D., Eve Glazier, M.D. & Elizabeth Ko, M.D.
Dear Doctor: Some studies suggest that long-term calorie restriction can lengthen lifespan; others say it won't. Which should we believe?
Dear Reader: This is a perplexing question. We need energy to live, and the food we eat provides that energy. Obviously, gluttony can lead to dire health consequences, including Type 2 diabetes, obesity and high blood pressure, but less obvious is the case for decreasing caloric intake to below normal levels in order to improve health.
The benefit of calorie restriction was first seen in laboratory rats in the 1930s. Subsequent studies have shown that a 30 to 60 percent reduction in calories in mice and rats led to an increase in both the average and maximal lifespan of the rodents.
Of note, researchers found equal improvement in average lifespan among rodents that exercised to keep the weight down, but no improvement in maximal lifespan. In other words, if the maximal age of a rat is 2 1/2 years, the maximum age would increase to 3 years by calorie restriction, but would stay at 2 1/2 years by exercise.
Calorie restriction has shown benefits in chickens, spiders and even single-celled organisms.
The reason may lie in the reduction of the metabolic rate that occurs with calorie restriction. In reducing the metabolic rate, the body temperature decreases, as does the formation rate of damaging oxidative chemicals. These oxidative chemicals damage DNA, cell membranes and the protein within cells, and may be one of the reasons that bodies age. Also, calorie restriction leads to a decrease in blood sugar and body insulin levels.
As for whether the physical benefits of calorie restriction apply to humans, a 2016 study in non-obese males and females compared those who maintained their normal diets to those who had a 25 percent decrease in their caloric intake. The subjects were followed for 24 months. The calorie restriction group lost almost 16 pounds more than the control group. Further, people's moods improved significantly in the calorie restriction group, as did reported improvements in quality of life, sleep and sexual function.
When it comes to calorie restriction and longevity, note that in Okinawa, Japan, calorie intake is 17 percent less in adults and 36 percent less in children when compared to the rest of Japan. The rate of death from heart attacks, strokes and cancer is 31 to 41 percent less than the national average. This doesn't prove cause and effect, but it does suggest the need for additional research.
Clearly, calorie restriction seems to have benefits, but proving those benefits over the long term in our not-so-steady human lives? That's not easy. Certainly, however, in our world of plenty, we need to be mindful of the amounts that we eat.

NEW YORK (AP) — Artist James Rosenquist, a key figure in the pop art movement, has died. He was 83.

Rosenquist's wife, Mimi Thompson, told The New York Times that he died Friday in New York City after a long illness.

Rosenquist started by painting signs and billboard advertisements in Times Square and other public places. He later incorporated images from popular culture, from celebrities to consumer goods, into his work.

One of his best-known pieces is "President Elect," created in the early 1960s. It is a billboard-style painting depicting John F. Kennedy's face alongside a yellow Chevrolet and a piece of cake.

"The face was from Kennedy's campaign poster. I was very interested at that time in people who advertised themselves," Rosenquist told the art appreciation organization The Art Story. "Why did they put up an advertisement of themselves? So that was his face. And his promise was half a Chevrolet and a piece of stale cake."

Another popular piece was Rosenquist's "F-111," which superimposes a Vietnam War fighter-bomber on images of children and consumer goods.

Rosenquist resisted comparisons to his contemporaries Andy Warhol and Roy Lichtenstein.

"I'm not like Andy Warhol. He did Coca-Cola bottles and Brillo pads. I used generic imagery — no brand names — to make a new kind of picture," Rosenquist said in a 2007 interview with Smithsonian magazine. "People can remember their childhood, but events from four or five years ago are in a never-never land. That was the imagery I was concerned with — things that were a little bit familiar but not things you feel nostalgic about. Hot dogs and typewriters — generic things people sort of recognize."

Rosenquist was born in Grand Forks, North Dakota. His mother was an amateur painter who supported his creative interests early on. His watercolor of a sunset won him an art scholarship to take classes at the Minneapolis School of Art. He later attended the University of Minnesota before moving to New York City in 1955.

In 2009, a fire destroyed several works by Rosenquist at his home and studio in Arippeka, Florida. It was the same year he released his autobiography, "Painting Below Zero: Notes on a Life in Art," written with David Dalton.

Rosenquist's work has been featured in solo exhibitions at the Solomon R. Guggenheim Museum, the Museum of Modern Art, the Whitney Museum of American Art and other institutions.

IN THIS Monday, July 23, 2007 file photo, a visitor stands next to James Rosenquist's "The Swimmer in the Econo-mist" on display at the exhibition "Art in America: Three Hundreds Years of Innovation" which opened in the Pushkin Fine Arts Museum in Moscow. Acclaimed Russian poet Yevgeny Yevtushenko dies in Oklahoma OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Acclaimed Russian poet Yevgeny A. Yevtushenko, whose work focused on war atrocities and denounced anti-Semitism and tyrannical dictators, has died. He was 84.

Ginny Hensley, a spokeswoman for Hillcrest Medical Center in the eastern Oklahoma city of Tulsa, confirmed Yevtushenko's death. Roger Blais, the provost at the University of Tulsa, where Yevtushenko was a longtime faculty member, said he was told Yevtushenko died Saturday morning.

Yevtushenko's son, Yevgeny Y. Yevtushenko, said his father died at about 11 a.m. and that doctors said he was suffering from stage 4 cancer.

"He passed away pretty peacefully, painlessly," the younger Yevtushenko said. He said family members and friends, including his widow, Maria Novikova, were with his father in his final hours.

"I was holding his hand about the last hour or so," he said. "He knew he was loved."

He said his father was first diagnosed with cancer about six years ago and underwent surgery to have part of his kidney removed, but the cancer had recently re-emerged.

"With cancer, you can't always catch it," the younger Yevtushenko said. "His situation

THIS SEPT. 13, 2007 file photo shows Russian poet Yevgeny Yevtushenko at his home in Tulsa, Okla. Yevtushenko, whose work focused on war atrocities and denounced anti-Semitism and tyrannical dictators, has died. He was 84, according to several Russian news outlets on Saturday.

kind of snowballed. His health kind of snowballed on Friday."

Yevtushenko gained notoriety in the former Soviet Union while in his 20s, with poetry denouncing Josef Stalin. He gained international acclaim as a young revolutionary with "Babi Yar," the unflinching 1961 poem that told of the slaughter of nearly 34,000 Jews by the Nazis and denounced the anti-Semitism that had spread throughout the Soviet Union.

At the height of his fame, Yevtushenko read his works in packed soccer stadiums and arenas, including to a crowd of 200,000 in 1991 that came to listen during a failed coup attempt in Russia. He also attracted large audiences on tours of the West.

With his tall, rangy body, chiseled visage and declaratory style, he was a compelling presence on stages when reading his works.

"He's more like a rock star than some sort of bespectacled, quiet poet," said former University of Tulsa President Robert Donaldson, who specialized in Soviet policy during his academic years at Harvard.

Until "Babi Yar" was published, the history of the massacre was shrouded in the fog of the Cold War.

"I don't call it political poetry, I call it human rights poetry; the poetry which defends human conscience as the greatest spiritual value," Yevtushenko, who had been splitting his time between Oklahoma and Moscow, said during a 2007 interview with The Associated Press at his home in Tulsa.

Yevtushenko said he wrote the poem after visiting the site of the mass killings in Kiev, Ukraine, and searching for something memorializing what happened there — a sign, a tombstone, some kind of historical marker — but finding nothing.

"I was so shocked. I was absolutely shocked when I saw it, that people didn't keep a memory about it," he said.

It took him two hours to write the poem that begins, "No monument stands over Babi Yar. A drop sheer as a crude gravestone. I am afraid."

Yevtushenko was born deep in Siberia in the town of Zima, a name that translates to winter. He rose to prominence during Nikita Khrushchev's rule.

His poetry was outspoken and drew on the passion for poetry that is characteristic of Russia, where poetry is more widely revered than in the West. Some considered it risky, though others said he was only a showpiece dissident whose public views never went beyond the limits of what officials would permit.

Dissident exile poet Joseph Brodsky was especially critical, saying "He throws stones only in directions that are officially sanctioned and approved." Brodsky resigned from the American Academy of Arts and Letters when Yevtushenko was made an honorary member.

Donaldson extended an invite to Yevtushenko to teach at the university in 1992.

"I like very much the University of Tulsa," Yevtushenko said in a 1995 interview with the AP. "My students are sons of ranchers, even cowboys, oil engineers. They are different people, but they are very gifted. They are closer to Mother Nature than the big city. They are more sensitive."

He was also touched after the 1995 bombing of a federal government building in Oklahoma City, killing 168 people. He recalled one woman in his class who lost a relative in the blast, then commented that Russian women must have endured such suffering all their lives.

Serbia's powerful PM claims landslide presidential win

BELGRADE, Serbia (AP) — Serbia's powerful Prime Minister Aleksandar Vucic claimed victory Sunday in the presidential election that was a test of his authoritarian rule, an outcome that could expand Russia's influence in the Balkans.

Speaking to supporters at his right-wing party's headquarters, Vucic said, "My victory is crystal clear. This is a very important day for us, showing which way Serbia should be heading."

"A huge majority of people in Serbia support continuation of the European path for Serbia, along with preserving our traditionally good ties with Russia and China," Vucic said, while his backers chanted "Victory, victory!"

While Vucic has said he wants to lead Serbia into the European Union, he has been pushing for deeper ties to longtime ally Russia. Russian President Vladimir Putin endorsed him.

Right before the election, Vucic visited Putin, who reportedly promised his signature on the delivery of fighter planes, battle tanks and armored vehicles to Serbia. The move triggered fears of an arms race in the western Balkans, which Russia considers its sphere of influence.

Vucic claimed victory after projections by different independent polling agencies had him receiving more than 55 percent of the votes cast during Sunday's election. Liberal challenger Sasa Jankovic placed second with 15 percent and Luka Maksimovic, a media student who ran as a parody politician, came in third with 9 percent, according to the pollsters.

Official results are expected Monday.

Vucic, a former ultranationalist who now declares support for Serbia joining the European Union, had been forecast to win the presidency by a high margin. He needed to secure more than 50 percent of the vote to avoid a runoff election on April 16 that would have put him in a trickier position facing off against a single opposition candidate.

Vucic has been prime minister since 2014. He is expected to use a win in the presidential race to appoint a figurehead successor as prime minister and to transform the presidency from a ceremonial office into a more powerful post from which he could rule unchallenged.

SASA JANKOVIC, center, a Serbian presidential candidate, casts his ballot for the presidential elections at a polling station in Belgrade, Serbia, Sunday. Voters in Serbia are casting ballots in a presidential election seen as a test of public support for populist Prime Minister Aleksandar Vucic and his autocratic rule.

Dylan finally gets his hands on his Nobel Literature prize

STOCKHOLM (AP) — Bob Dylan finally has his hands on his Nobel Literature diploma and medal.

Klas Ostergren, a member of the Swedish Academy, said the 75-year-old American singer-songwriter received his award during a small gathering Saturday afternoon at a hotel next to the conference center where Dylan was performing a concert later that night.

Ostergren told The Associated Press that the ceremony was a small, intimate event in line with the singer's wishes, with just academy members and a member of Dylan's staff attending.

"It went very well indeed," he said, describing Dylan as "a very nice, kind man."

Other members of the academy told Swedish media that Dylan seemed pleased by the award.

During his show hours later, Dylan made no reference to the Nobel award, simply performing a set blending old classics with tunes from his more recent albums.

Dylan had declined the invitation to attend the traditional Nobel Prize banquet and ceremony on Dec. 10 — the date of Alfred Nobel's death — pleading other commitments.

But in order to receive the award worth 8 million kronor ($894,800), Dylan must give a lecture within six months from Dec. 10. He has said he will not give his Nobel lecture this weekend but a recorded version of it will be sent later.

Taped Nobel lectures have been occasionally presented, most recently in 2013 by Canadian Nobel literature laureate Alice Munro.

"I think he has said it all already as you heard in the acceptance speech. And you know, Dylan didn't apply for the Nobel prize. People seem to forget that. It wasn't a competition, he didn't ask for it, he was bestowed it. It's not for the giver of a gift to expect something in return," said Shmuel Burger, a 61-year-old physician and diehard Dylan fan who traveled from Israel for the concert.

The 2016 Nobel Prize in Literature was awarded to Dylan "for having created new poetic expressions within the great American song tradition." He had expressed awe at receiving the Nobel Prize and thanked the Swedish Academy for including him among the "giants" of writing.

Besides his two concerts in Stockholm, Dylan will also play in the southwestern city of Lund on April 9.

Dems urge Trump to veto bill blocking online privacy rule

NEW YORK (AP) — Senate Minority Leader Charles Schumer is urging President Donald Trump to veto a resolution that would kill an online privacy regulation, a move that could allow internet providers to sell information about their customers' browsing habits.

The New York senator and 46 other Senate Democrats signed a letter calling on Trump to "tell us whose side he's really on."

The Federal Communications Commission rule issued in October was designed to give consumers greater control over how internet service providers such as Comcast, AT&T and Verizon share information. But critics said the rule would have stifled innovation and picked winners and losers among internet companies.

Both the House and the Senate voted this week to pass the resolution, sending it to Trump.

"If President Trump clicks his pen and signs this resolution, consumers will be stripped of critical privacy protections in a New York minute," Schumer said. "Signing this rollback into law would mean private data from our laptops, iPads, and even our cellphones would be fair game for internet companies to sell and make a fast buck."
