Ironwood considers revoking some marijuana permits

By ZACHARY MARANO
zmarano@yourdailyglobe.com

IRONWOOD — At their regular meeting on Aug. 4, the Ironwood Planning Commission discussed revoking Higher Love Corporation and Rize U.P.'s conditional use permits if the marijuana establishments cannot show progress on their growing facilities before the winter 2022-2023 season.

Director of Community Development Tom Bergman said that licenses were awarded to these microbusinesses in February 2021 in part because they stated they would open growing facilities on their applications. He said that if the businesses have not shown progress on these facilities, it could affect their licenses and permits.

Bergman said that he already notified the two microbusinesses about this. He said that the planning commission will discuss this item again in their October meeting and the owners will be invited to this meeting for comment.

“That’s why I think the end of the building season makes sense to have that discussion — because if they haven’t started, it’s not like they’re going to start this thing in the middle of January,” Bergman said.

Bergman said that the planning commission has the authority to revoke a conditional use permit after six months of issuing it if progress hasn’t started. However, he noted that the ordinance’s language does not require the planning commission to do this.

If the planning commission revokes the permits, Bergman said, that will mean there will no longer be two pre-approved microbusinesses in the city. He said that the city commission would then discuss and consider re-opening the application process to award these licenses to other businesses.

In his update on the downtown development plan and tax increment financing project, Bergman told the planning commission that the Grand Rapids-

Michels wins Wisconsin GOP governor primary, will face Evers

By LARRY HOLCOMBE

Tim Michels, a wealthy businessman endorsed by former President Donald Trump, won the Republican primary for Wisconsin governor on Tuesday and will face Democratic Gov. Tony Evers in November’s general election.

Michels defeated former Lt. Gov. Rebecca Kleefisch, 47% to 42%, who was endorsed by former Vice President Mike Pence and had backing from establishment Republicans, including ex-Gov. Scott Walker. Evers ran unopposed.

Iron County Republican voters also went with Michels, where he won 61%-27% over Kleefisch. None of the other three candidates on the Republican ballot garnered more than 5% in the county.

Iron County’s voters mostly mirrored statewide results in a busy primary full of several state and federal offices.

Lt. Gov. Mandela Barnes won the Democratic nomination to face Republican U.S. Sen. Ron Johnson, one of Trump’s most vocal supporters. Barnes won 78% of the statewide vote on a ballot with eight candidates, followed by Alex Lasry with 9% and Sarah Godlewski with 8%. Barnes garnered 67% of the Democrat votes in Iron County, followed by Godlewski at 17% and Lasry, 8%.

In the race for state attorney general, Fond du Lac County district attorney Eric Toney defeated former state Rep. Adam Jarchow to win the Republican nomination, 38%-37%. Toney will face incumbent Democrat Josh Kaul in the general election. Toney also won in Iron County, 40%-34%, over Jarchow.

Jarchow conceded early Wednesday as unofficial but nearly complete results showed him trailing Toney by fewer than 4,000 votes, or about 0.6% of the vote.

Draft horses pull off a great show at Iron County Fair

SAXON, Wis. — One of the most popular events at this year’s Iron County Fair was the draft horse pulling contest, in which four 2-horse teams pulled thousands of pounds in an attempt to show who’s boss.

It turns out that every team left with an award, but that seemed less important than the sheer excitement that the Sunday contest generated among all parties: horses, drivers and members of the audience who watched in anticipation from the fairground grandstands or from behind a fence surrounding the track.

The horses were magnificent, not only for their strength, but also for their bulk and beauty.

Dean Kurth of Ogema, Wisconsin, said his horses, Sally and Tia, weigh about 4,000 pounds combined and stand at 17 and one-half hands high.

“Usually, true heavyweights are 4,500-5,000,” he said.

Kurth said his horses are Belgian, which is a major breed for pulling, but he said other breeds also can pull.

His son, Jordan, was driving their team on Sunday.

“It can be very dangerous,” admitted Jordan. “It’s fun, but you gotta watch what you’re doing.”

That was clear when Jay and Jim — the horse team driven by Mark Hill of Glidden — got a bit frisky while being hooked up to the weighted pulling sled and tried to take off before Hill was properly positioned.

Hill quickly got the horses in line, but

Bessemer City Council to pursue Headlee Override for roads

By P.J. GLISSON
news@yourdailyglobe.com

BESSEMER — The Bessemer City Council voted Monday evening to authorize City Manager Charly Loper to explore the process of pursuing a Headlee Override in order to allow a means of funding road construction.

The action came after council members discussed the current restrictions the city faces in pursuing road funds.

For instance, said Loper, “Townships are allowed road millages.” By contrast, she reported that cities can pursue road millages only if the city’s total millage remains under 20 mills.

Within her agenda report, Loper stated, “The city currently has 17.2765 mills plus one mill for the library. This is 20 mills that is authorized by our charter, reduced by Headlee.”

Pursuing a Headlee Override, she noted, “could bring in an extra $80,000+ to the city each year.”

Mayor Adam Zak emphasized that a

SUPPORTERS OF Donald Trump, members of the media and law enforcement gather near Mar-a-Lago in Palm Beach, Fla., on Tuesday.

GOP rallies around Trump following FBI search of his estate

By STEVE PEOPLES
 AP National Politics Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — For much of the year, small cracks in Donald Trump’s political support have been growing.

Dissatisfied Republican primary voters began to consider new presidential prospects. GOP donors grappled with damaging revelations uncovered by the Jan. 6 committee. Several party leaders pondered challenging Trump for the party’s 2024 nomination.

But after the FBI executed a search warrant at his Florida estate, the Republican Party unified swiftly behind the former president.

Florida Gov. Ron DeSantis, who likely represents Trump’s strongest potential primary challenger, described the Biden administration as a “regime” and called Monday’s Mar-a-Lago search for improperly taken classified documents “another escalation in the weaponization of federal agencies against the Regime’s political opponents.”

The GOP push to portray Trump as the victim of a politicized Justice Department ignored the potential criminal misconduct that justified the search in the eyes of a federal judge. It overlooked Trump’s role in hiring now-vilified FBI Director Chris Wray, who also served as a high-ranking official in a Republican-led Justice Department. The Biden White House, meanwhile, said it had no prior knowledge of the search.

But the robust defense serves as a fresh reminder of the former president’s enduring grip on the GOP, driven by an ability to use a sense of grievance among many Republican voters toward government and other institutions. Trump tapped into that animosity to overcome two impeachments and the fallout from an insurrection. His allies said Tuesday that the FBI search would only strengthen his position again.

“The sooner he kicks off his campaign, the better,” Indiana GOP Rep. Jim Banks, the chair of the Republican Study Committee, said in an interview.

Banks was among about a dozen Republican lawmakers who spent several hours Tuesday evening with Trump at his summer home in Bedminster, New Jersey. During a meal that included steak, scallops, mashed potatoes, salad and a Trump cookie, the group talked about the upcoming midterm elections and the 2024 presidential race, Banks said.

The former president told the lawmakers “his mind is made up” about a 2024 campaign and “we’ll all be happy with his decision.”

The FBI search seemed to trigger a shift among Trump’s advisers, who had been privately urging him to wait until after the midterm elections to announce his intention to seek the presidency again. Suddenly, some of those same advisers were urging him to launch his campaign before the November elections.

Trump stoked such speculation in the hours after the search by posting a campaign-style video on social media. “The best is yet to come,” he said.

He followed up with a fundraising appeal, making it personal by declaring “it’s important that you know that it wasn’t just my home that was violated — it was the home of every patriotic American who I have been fighting for.”

In Columbia, South Carolina, Sen.

Lindsey Graham said he spoke with Trump and felt sure another campaign was coming.

“One thing I can tell you,” Graham said. “I believed he was going to run before. I’m stronger in my belief now.”

As Republicans rallied behind Trump, Democrats pushed back against GOP claims of political interference, without evidence. Some accused the GOP of a departure from its longstanding commitment to “law and order.”

“The FBI director was appointed by Donald Trump,” said House Speaker Nancy Pelosi.

Asked if the raid might hurt Democrats in the November elections, she said: “You’re talking about if the Justice Department decides to have a warrant to go in because they suspect something is justified, it’s going to have an impact on the election? No, no, no, no, no.”

Some of Trump’s most vocal Republican critics still shied away from embracing the former president. And it was unclear how rank-and-file Republican voters and independents frustrated by Trump’s divisive leadership might be moved by the new developments.

Former New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie, a former federal prosecutor and one of many Republicans considering a 2024 presidential bid, noted Tuesday that a federal judge had to sign off on the warrant.

“The former president is presumed innocent,” Christie said in an interview. “On the other hand, we can’t immediately impugn the motives of the prosecutors just because they’re from another political party.”

“It’s an extraordinary action. And there better be some pretty extraordinary facts to underlie it. If there are, then they have every right to do it.”

And some other Republican officials seemed to express continued concerns about Trump by refusing to weigh in at all.

The relatively short list of those GOP leaders who remained silent Tuesday afternoon was led by Senate Republican leader Mitch McConnell, who has privately encouraged his party to move past Trump. But the Kentucky Republican eventually weighed in, saying: “The country deserves a thorough and immediate explanation of what led to the events of Monday. Attorney General Garland and the Department of Justice should already have provided answers to the American people and must do so immediately.”

The overwhelming majority — from House Republican Leader Kevin McCarthy to DeSantis, accused the Biden administration of “weaponizing” the Justice Department and ignored any potential wrongdoing by Trump.

“The GOP now fully embraces the notion that Trump should, indeed, be above the law, and that Trump 2.0 will be a bonfire of vengeance,” wrote Republican commentator Charlie Sykes, a frequent Trump critic.

Former Vice President Mike Pence, who is gearing up for a presidential run of his own, said he shared “the deep concerns of millions of Americans” over the search of Trump’s private residence.

He stopped short of attacking the FBI, however. Instead, he said Attorney General Merrick Garland should “give a full accounting to the American people as to why this action was taken.”

Evers administration picks site for new youth prison

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — Officials in Gov. Tony Evers’ administration have moved a step closer toward replacing the state’s troubled youth prison, announcing Tuesday that they’ve picked a site in Milwaukee for a new facility.

The existing youth prison, a combination facility for boys and girls known as Lincoln Hills School for Boys and Copper Lake School for Girls, is located outside Irma in northern Wisconsin. The prison has been plagued by allegations of guard-on-prisoner abuse for years. The American Civil Liberties Union in 2017 filed a federal lawsuit, which resulted in a judge ordering an independent monitor to provide regular reports on prison conditions.

The Legislature in 2018 passed a bill calling for the state Department of Corrections to close the prison and replace it with smaller, regional facilities.

Efforts to find locations and secure funding proved fruitless until Evers signed a bill earlier this year that allocated $42 million for a new state youth prison. Administration officials said Thursday that as of July 28 they had signed an agreement to acquire the site. The Milwaukee Journal Sentinel reported the site is in an industrial district.

Under the bill, the Milwaukee Common Council must sign off on the site. The council isn’t scheduled to meet again until September, but Evers’ administration said council President Jose Perez is expected to call a special meeting to vote on the site this week. The Journal Sentinel reported the meeting is set for Friday.

Council approval would be the first of a number of steps toward construction, including public hearings and rezoning approval from the city.

Jury is told 2 men wanted to kidnap Whitmer, start revolt

GRAND RAPIDS (AP) — Two anti-government extremists sought to spark a “second American revolution” by kidnapping Michigan Gov. Gretchen Whitmer, a prosecutor told jurors Wednesday as the government got a second opportunity to get convictions in an alleged plot to shock the country into chaos before the 2020 election.

Adam Fox and Barry Croft Jr. are on trial for a second time, four months after a jury couldn’t reach a unanimous verdict while acquitting two other men.

The jury will hear competing themes. Prosecutors again will present secretly recorded conversations and video, text messages and social media posts to show that a band of rebels was serious about snatching the Democratic governor. Defense attorneys, however, insist there was no actual conspiracy. They will attack the motivations of undercover FBI agents and informants who got inside the group and built the investigation.

Fox, 39, lived in the Grand Rapids area and Croft, 46, is from Bear, Delaware. They regularly communicated with other extremists who were angry with Whitmer and various public officials over COVID-19 restrictions.

But Assistant U.S. Attorney Christopher O’Connor said the seeds were planted well ahead of the pandemic.

Before Fox and Croft “planned and trained to kidnap the governor of Michigan, they called for a second American revolution,” O’Connor told jurors. “They wanted to violently overthrow elected government officials because they believed those officials were tyrants who were constantly violating their rights.”

“Barry Croft believed all it would take to start that revolution was to hang a governor,” the prosecutor said. “That was a call to action in early 2020. ... His promise to elected government officials, the tyrants: expect us.”

A jury was selected Tuesday after some people were dismissed for health reasons or for political beliefs they couldn’t set aside.

“It’s not disqualifying to have views one way or the other,” U.S. District Judge Robert Jonker told the pool. “It’s disqualifying if the views become more important than what the law or the evidence is.”

Fox and Croft are charged with two counts of conspiracy. Croft faces a third weapons-related charge.

The plot to kidnap Whitmer followed training in Wisconsin and Michigan and two trips to scout her second home in northern Michigan, O’Connor said.

Daniel Harris and Brandon Caserta were found not guilty in April. Ty Garbin and Kaleb Franks pleaded guilty and will testify again for prosecutors.

Whitmer has blamed then-President Donald Trump for stoking mistrust and fomenting anger over coronavirus restrictions and refusing to condemn hate groups and right-wing extremists like those charged in the plot. Democrat Joe Biden sought to tie Trump to the plot as well, pointing to the president’s tweet in earlier in 2020 to “LIBERATE MICHIGAN!”

Spider-Man turns 60

By AARON MORRISON
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Spider-Man fandom is in Tyler Scott Hoover's blood — but not because he was bitten by an irradiated arachnid. His father had collected Marvel comic books featuring the character since the 1970s.

"He passed down a ton of comics to me," says Hoover, 32, of Glen Burnie, Maryland. "It kind of makes it almost like a religion. It would have been hard for me not to become a fan of Spider-Man."

There are legions of fans of Spider-Man, who this month marks 60 years in the vast, imaginative world of comic books, movies and merch. Among those fans are devotees like Hoover, a professional Spider-Man cosplayer and model who doesn't resemble the longtime "canon" presentation of the character. However, in the cinematic and comics universes, a Black Spider-Man is now reality.

Hoover is biracial — of Black and white ancestry — and stands at 6 feet 2 inches. And the story of his fandom illustrates an important point about New York City's favorite super-powered wall-crawler: The appeal of the character long ago transcended its original iteration as a white, unimposing, orphaned teenager.

The Spider-Man character's classic costume, complete with wide-eyed and web-patterned mask, is a key ingredient to the character's appeal across race, gender and nationality. Almost anyone can imagine themselves behind it as this everyman — an underestimated smartypants who, after a quick change into head-to-toe spandex, becomes a force for good.

"The older I got, slowly but surely, I saw how relatable the character was," Hoover says. "He had to work through his struggles while still maintaining a secret identity and doing good for the people. That kind of moral compass is powerful, especially for an impressionable mind."

More importantly, Hoover says, it's Spider-Man's struggle to protect his hometown that makes the character more believable than superheroes whose origin stories include wealth and influence. No coincidence, surely, that he refers to himself as "your friendly neighborhood Spider-Man."

Created by the late Stan Lee and Steve Ditko, Spider-Man appeared in comics as early as June 1962, although the canon date of his debut is Aug. 10, 1962, in Marvel's Amazing Fantasy #15. Peter Parker, a high schooler bitten by a spider from a science experiment, developed superhuman strength, the ability to cling to solid surfaces and fast reflexes aided by the ability to sense and anticipate danger.

But on his journey to becoming a superhero, Parker fails to stop a burglar who kills his Uncle Ben, leaving his adoptive aunt widowed. The character then strives to honor the words etched at the end of that debut issue, later attributed to his uncle: "With great power, there must also come great responsibility."

Racially and culturally diverse superheroes, generally absent from the mainstream comics scene during its first decades, began to emerge in the years after Spider-Man's debut, particularly at Marvel.

IN THESE undated photos provided by Tyler Scott Hoover, a professional Spider-Man cosplayer and model, Hoover is pictured in the classic costume of the Marvel comic superhero. In August 2022, as the iconic character marks 60 years in the vast, imaginative world of comic books, movies and merchandise, fans like Hoover reflect on Spider-Man's appeal across race, gender and nationality.

In 1966, Black Panther, also known as Prince T'Challa of the fictional and reclusive African nation of Wakanda, became the first Black Marvel comic superhero. Debuting in the 1970s were characters such as Storm, the mutant goddess most known as a member of Marvel's X-Men; Luke Cage, Marvel's formerly imprisoned Black Harlemit with superhuman strength and nearly impenetrable skin; Shang-Chi, the master martial artist who is among the first Asian Marvel superheroes; and Red Wolf, the expert archer and first Native American Marvel superhero.

"Sometimes when we think of superheroes, we think of billionaires in suits, brilliant scientists or Norse gods," says Angélique Roché, host of the podcast "Marvel's Voices" and co-author of the upcoming book "My Super Hero Is Black."

Spider-Man turned the idea of mostly privileged humans using their wealth and power to become heroes on its head, she says. Spider-Man iterations, in the comics and in film, have appeared across multiple universes, or the so-called "spiderverse." Miles Morales, a teenage, Afro Latino Spider-Man, has become wildly popular and starred in his own animated feature film. Cindy Moon, a Korean-American known as Silk, was bitten by the same spider as Peter Parker.

"Because Spider Man means so much to us, we should always be open to the possibilities," Roché says. "We should always hope and believe that there's

'The Snowman' children's author Raymond Briggs dies at 88

LONDON (AP) — British children's author and illustrator Raymond Briggs, whose creations include "The Snowman" and "Fungus the Bogeyman," has died. He was 88.

Briggs' family said he died Tuesday, and thanked staff at Royal Sussex County Hospital, near his home in southern England, "for their kind and thoughtful care of Raymond in his final weeks."

"We know that Raymond's books were loved by and touched millions of people around the world, who will be sad to hear this news," the family said in a statement released Wednesday through Publisher Penguin Random House.

Born in London in 1934, Briggs studied art and briefly worked in advertising before starting a decades-long career as a children's illustrator. He won a Kate Greenaway Medal — considered the Oscars of children's publishing — in 1966 for illustrating a book of nursery rhymes, "The Mother Goose Treasury."

He tweaked a fairy-tale story with "Jim and the Beanstalk," published in 1970, and won a second Greenaway award for "Father Christmas." Published in 1973, it featured a grumpy but genial Santa Claus and — like many of Briggs' books — was adapted for television.

"Fungus the Bogeyman," which charted a day in the life of a scary subterranean monster, disgusted and delighted children in equal measure after its publication in 1977.

The next year came "The Snowman," a bitter-sweet story in which a boy's wintry creation magically comes to life. The wordless book has sold more than 5.5 million copies around the world, and a 1982 animated adaptation has been shown on British TV every Christmas since.

Far more somber was 1982's "When the Wind Blows," a story about the aftermath of a nuclear attack on Britain imbued with melancholy and anger. It was adapted as an animated film in 1986, with music by David Bowie and others.

Briggs' anti-nuclear stance made him unpopular with members of British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Conservative government. So did "The Tin-Pot Foreign General and the Old Iron Woman," a picture-book satire on the Falklands War.

Later works include "Ethel & Ernest," a poignant graphic novel based on the lives of Briggs' parents, published in 1998.

Briggs' books were poignant but never saccharine, shot through with the tart humor that rippled beneath his curmudgeonly public persona. Despite creating several seasonal classics, he always claimed to hate Christmas, and once said of children: "I try to avoid them whenever possible."

"Raymond liked to act the professional curmudgeon, but we will remember him for his stories of love and of loss," said Briggs' literary agent, Hilary Delamere. "I know from the many letters he received how his books and animations touched people's hearts."

Francesca Dow, managing director of Penguin Random House Children's, said Briggs was "unique" and "inspired generations of creators of picture books, graphic novels and animations."

"Raymond's books are picture masterpieces that address some of the fundamental questions of what it is to be human, speaking to both adults and children with a remarkable economy of words and illustrations," she said.

Briggs family said he "lived a rich and full life" and felt lucky to have had both his late wife and his late partner of over 40 years in it.

Briggs wife, Jean, died in 1973 and his partner, Liz, died in 2015. He is survived by a stepson and stepdaughter and their families.

In Their Opinion

It's time to pump funds into sewer projects

Rich is good in a lot of cases. Rich is good in the Mega Millions lotto. Rich is good when it comes to flavor of foods like cheesecake and chocolate. Rich in nutrition is good for health, but "nutrient-rich" is bad if you're an oligotrophic lake. Those nutrients come from things like fertilizers, farm animals and waterfowl. Also, decaying human feces from leaky septic systems.

But in Higgins Lake, some residents feel like the proposed $115 million sewer system is too rich for their blood, even as the waters show signs of septic system pollution. The Gerrish and Lyon township-plan is fueling petition drives and animosity between neighbors, reported Bridge Michigan, as sides split between wealthier lakeshore residents who can afford the increased sewer rates, and those lower-income residents in the backlots who see the move as another way to make the rich, richer by mushrooming McMansions with more bathrooms and subsequent hikes in property values.

It's an understandable quandary. Throw in historic bad blood when lakeshore residents cut off backlot residents' access to the lake, and the sewer scrap is no mystery.

But the health of Higgins Lake impacts the tourism-driven community in its entirety, and the spike in plant and algae growth is already changing the clear, blue lake into a weedier one.

This change is being echoed across our state's northern reaches.

Torch, Elk and Skegemog lake communities are among others seeing troubling algae blooms and plant growth, ringed by residents' divided on the septic tank issue. Our state has about 1.4 million septic systems and the dubious honor of being the only one without a uniform septic code.

But Michigan's tanks are full to brimming currently with the unprecedented COVID-19 funds. Now is the time to pump funding into sewer infrastructure that will keep our prized fresh waters healthier, while helping lower-income residents make up the difference. It won't be easy — Northport residents are still smarting over the sewer scrapes of years past — but it can be done.

Our legislators need to lead instead of letting the decaying human fecal matter just flow downstream.

Everyone uses the bathroom, but no one wants to swim, fish, recreate or relax in a toilet.

Nutrient-rich isn't good, but clean water enriches us.

Traverse City Record-Eagle

86,852 new IRS employees

You've probably heard Republicans say the Inflation Reduction Act — the massive spending bill just passed by Senate Democrats — includes provisions to hire 87,000 new Internal Revenue Service agents. The number seems too big too believe. The IRS has just 93,654 employees, according to the Office of Personnel Management. Why would Congress, in one bill, increase the IRS workforce by something like 92%? It doesn't seem possible. It certainly doesn't seem wise.

It's not wise, but it is possible. And that is what 50 Senate Democrats, along with tie-breaking Vice President Kamala Harris, did when they passed the Inflation Reduction Act, which gives roughly $80 billion to the IRS between now and 2031. (The name, "Inflation Reduction Act," was a ruse to convince gullible voters that Democrats are actually doing something about inflation; the bill itself is made up of expensive climate measures, plus prescription drug provisions, tax increases and the initiative to increase IRS enforcement.)

The Inflation Reduction Act is the slimmed-down version of the even more massive Build Back Better bill, which failed earlier this year due to the opposition of Democratic Sen. Joe Manchin. We know a lot about the IRS provisions of the new bill because the same provisions were in Build Back Better, which the administration extensively promoted. That's where the 87,000 figure came from. In May 2021, the Treasury Department produced a 22-page analysis of Build Back Better, and in supporting tables, the document said the bill would add 86,852 FTEs, or full-time equivalent employees, to the IRS between now and the year 2031. Do a little rounding, and there's the 87,000.

It's fair to say that Democrats are always searching for ways to wring more cash out of the American taxpayer. The obvious way to do that is to raise taxes. But the largest number of potential tax collections is in the vast middle of the U.S. income scale. To raise taxes on the middle class is politically unpopular. So Democrats pledge to raise taxes on the "rich" and "rich corporations." The Inflation Reduction Act focuses on corporations, creating a minimum tax for companies with more than $1 billion in profits. As for individuals, the portion of the bill dealing with the IRS says, "Nothing in this section is intended to increase taxes on any taxpayer or small business with a taxable income below $400,000. Further, nothing in this section is intended to increase taxes on any taxpayer not in the top 1%." Read it closely, and it doesn't really mean anything.

The other way Democrats have sought to raise more taxpayer dollars is by beefing up the IRS. The idea is that Americans are evading all sorts of taxes, creating a "tax gap" — according to the Treasury Department, "the difference between taxes owed to the government and actually paid." The Biden administration says tax cheats are primarily "high-income." "In order for the IRS to appropriately focus enforcement scrutiny on high-income taxpayers and the businesses they own — which research has shown is the primary source of the tax gap — its budget must be replenished," the Treasury Department says.

The problem is what the problem always is: The big money is in the big middle class. Americans who make more than $400,000 — that includes people right at that number up to super-billionaires — are only about 1.8% of all taxpayers, even though they account for about 25% of the nation's income. The other 98.2%, making up about 75% of the nation's income, is a lot bigger. And indeed, that's where much of current IRS enforcement is focused. The same will likely be true of the new, muscled-up IRS.

"The main targets will by necessity be the middle- and upper-middle class because that's where the money is," the Wall Street Journal editorial board wrote recently. "The Joint Committee on Taxation, Congress's official tax scorekeeper, says that from 78% to 90% of the money raised from under-reported income would likely come from those making less than $200,000 a year. Only 4% to 9% would come from those making more than $500,000."

In any event, there will be a lot of increased enforcement; about $45 billion of the $80 billion for the IRS will go to investigating taxpayers. That means that not every one of the IRS's 86,852 new employees will be auditors and examiners, but a lot of that manpower will in fact go to audits and increased scrutiny of taxpayers. Many of the targeted taxpayers will have to hire accountants to represent them in dealings with the IRS.

Why oppose such a move? After all, Democrats are assuring the public that the money will go to pursue "wealthy tax cheats," in the words of Sen. Ron Wyden. "Wealthy tax cheats are ripping off the American people to the tune of billions and billions of dollars per year," Wyden said last year, in support of Build Back Better's IRS provisions. Who is not in favor of going after wealthy tax cheats? Well, for one thing, they're not all going to be wealthy, and they're not all going to be cheating. The tax system is complex. People make mistakes that are not cheating.

Also — assume the IRS does, in fact, need more money for enforcement. How much is too much? It can be difficult for an organization to handle a huge windfall; it's just too much to deal with efficiently. And that is what, it appears, Democrats have done to the IRS. Last year, when the Build Back Better provisions were being debated, The New York Times interviewed John Koskinen, who headed the IRS under Presidents Obama and Trump. "Koskinen ... said he thought the $80 billion being proposed by the Biden administration might be too much," the paper reported. "The suggestion was surprising coming from someone who lamented loudly that the agency was being starved when he was in charge. 'I'm not sure you'd be able to efficiently use that much money,' Mr. Koskinen said in an interview. 'That's a lot of money.' Mr. Koskinen said he thought an extra $25 billion over a decade would help bring the IRS budget back to where it was around 2010 ..."

The $80 billion to the IRS is too much, too fast, with too little purpose. All Americans should be concerned about it.

based firm McKenna will soon send them a draft of the city's proposed new development boundary. He said that the next step after that will be forming a committee of downtown residents to review the plan and make a recommendation on it.

If the committee recommends adoption, Bergman said that there will be a 60-day period for the city to bring the taxing jurisdictions on board to fund the project.

The planning commission approved Rize U.P.'s request for a sign at their establishment at 411 E. Cloverland Drive. Bergman said that this new sign will comply with the zoning ordinance revision approved in July.

This sign will have an electronic display. Bergman said that the new ordinance is more specific about electronic signs. To be consistent with this ordinance, staff recommended that this sign not flash, fade in or out or scroll; not create a nuisance for and be located 100 feet from residential properties; have illumination levels not exceeding 1.0 footcandles; have a changeable message not exceeding a third of the sign; and have no animations.

The planning commission also held a public hearing on a site plan revision for the Fire Station, which was awarded a Class C growing facilities license by the city in February. The site plan included "substantial" alternations including removing the current structure at the location on 507 N. Lake St. and then building a new structure with the parking area exclusively on the north side of the property.

Bergman also said that this site plan addresses the city engineer's concerns about the self-contained storm water system going to seepage beds rather than the storm sewer. The revised site plan included an overflow system to prevent runoff. The owners also indicated they would relocate an overhead power pole or connect power underground and that the Lake Avenue connector would be exit-only.

After the owners answered some questions about the revised site plan from the public, the planning committee agreed to table this item until their next meeting on Sept. 1 before approval, because committee chair Sam Davey said, "There's a lot of stuff we have to digest and a lot of stuff we have to find out more on."

"In a close and highly contested race, we came up just short," Jarchow tweeted. "It's time to unite behind @EricJToney and ensure he has the resources and support needed to fire Josh Kaul. Eric Toney has my full support."

Karen Mueller, who ran as an outsider who wants to decertify the 2020 presidential election results, ran a strong third statewide with 25% of the vote. She had 26% of the vote in Iron County.

Democrat Sarah Rodriguez will face Republican Roger Roth for lieutenant governor in the fall. Rodriguez defeated Peng Her 76%-24%, and 82%-16% in Iron County. Roth beat back a crowded field with a 30%-18% win over second place finisher Patrick Testin. Roth won Iron County 24%-21% over Testin, again in second place.

State Secretary of State Doug LaFollette fought off a Democratic primary challenge from Alexia Sabor, 64%-36%. He also won Iron County, 70%-30%. On the Republican side, Amy Loudbeck defeated Jay Schroeder 46%-40% for a spot on the November ballot. Justin Schmidtka had 14%. In the only differing result in Iron County, Schroeder won Iron County 43%-37% over second place Loudbeck.

Republican John Leiber and Democrat Aaron Richardson will face off in November for state treasurer. Leiber beat Orlando Owens 66%-34% statewide and in Iron County.

Richardson defeated Gillian Battino 38%-36% statewide and 44%-40% in Iron County. Current state treasurer Sarah Godlewski lost a bid for the Democratic nomination for U.S. Senate on Tuesday.

U.S. Rep. Tom Tiffany, R-Minocqua, will run to keep his District 7 seat in Congress against Richard Ausman, D-Lac du Flambeau, in November. While Ausman ran unopposed Tuesday for his party's nomination, Tiffany defeated David Kunelius, of Arbor Vitae, 87%-13% statewide and 89%-11% in Iron County. Kunelius ran on a "Make America Nice Again" platform.

Democrat Kelly Westlund, of Ashland, will face Republican Romaine Quinn, of Cameron, in November for the state senate's District 25 seat. They both ran unopposed in Tuesday's primary. Republican Chanz Green, of Ashland, will face Democrat John Adams, of Washburn, for the District 74 seat in the state assembly. Green won Tuesday's primary 67%-33% over John Schey across the district, and 52%-48% in Iron County.

Locally, Iron County Sheriff Paul Samardich garnered 778 votes, running unopposed for re-election in the Republican primary. There were no Democrat candidates. Likewise, Clerk of Circuit Court Karen Ransanici got 473 votes running unopposed for re-election in the Democratic primary; and there were no Republican candidates. Newcomer Robert Barnabo had 729 votes running unopposed for county coroner in the Republican primary; and there were no Democrat candidates.

According to Iron County election officials, there were 1,471 voters across the county, and there were no votes for the Libertarian or Constitution parties. The Associated Press contributed to this report.

Michigan: Company released industrial chemicals into water

WIXOM (AP) — Michigan environmental have issued violation notices against an auto trim maker following the release of industrial chemicals into a river system northwest of Detroit. Michigan's Department of Environment, Great Lakes, and Energy says its Water Resources Division served Tribar Manufacturing in Wixom on Tuesday. A plating solution containing hexavalent chromium was discharged to a sanitary sewer system the weekend of July 29.

Omar ekes out House primary win over centrist in Minnesota

WASHINGTON (AP) — Minnesota Rep. Ilhan Omar, a member of the progressive Squad, eked out a closer-than-expected Democratic primary victory Tuesday against a centrist challenger who questioned the incumbent's support for the "defund the police" movement.

The evening went far smoother for another progressive, Becca Balint, who won the Democratic House primary in Vermont — positioning her to become the first woman representing the state in Congress.

In Minnesota, a Republican was headed to Congress to serve the remaining months of the late Rep. Jim Hagedorn's term.

And a key race was unfolding in western Wisconsin, where Democratic Rep. Ron Kind's retirement after 26 years in office opens up a seat in a district that has been trending Republican. The GOP nominee vying to replace Kind is a former Navy SEAL who attended the "Stop the Steal" rally in Washington on Jan. 6, 2021, which preceded the insurrection at the U.S. Capitol.

Omar, who represents Minneapolis and is one of the left's leading voices in Congress, has defended calls to redirect public safety funding more into community-based programs. She squared off with former City Councilmember Don Samuels, whose north Minneapolis base suffers from more violent crime than other parts of the city.

Samuels argued that Omar is divisive and helped defeat a ballot question last year that sought to replace the city police department with a new public safety unit. He and others also successfully sued the city to force it to meet minimum police staffing levels called for in Minneapolis' charter.

Samuels said his narrow loss shows that Omar is beatable: "If this was the general election, no doubt that we would have won this race." Omar countered, "Tonight's victory is a testament to how much our district believes in the collective values we are fighting for."

Republicans see a pickup opportunity in Wisconsin's 3rd Congressional District, the seat being vacated by Democratic incumbent Kind.

The district covers a swath of counties along Wisconsin's western border with Minnesota and includes La Crosse and Eau Claire. Republican Derrick Van Orden was unopposed in his primary Tuesday and has Trump's endorsement.

Van Orden narrowly lost to Kind in the 2020 general election. He attended Trump's "Stop the Steal" rally near the White House but has said he never stepped foot on the grounds of the Capitol during the insurrection.

State Sen. Brad Pfaff topped three other Democrats to secure the party's nomination and will face Van Orden in the fall. Pfaff, a onetime state agriculture secretary, had previously worked for Kind and received his endorsement.

Vermont is the last state in the country yet to add a female member to its congressional delegation. Balint, who immediately becomes the favorite in November's general election, would also be the first openly gay member of Congress from Vermont.

She was endorsed by some of the nation's leading leaders on the left, including Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders, Massachusetts Sen. Elizabeth Warren and Rep. Pramila Jayapal, chair of the Congressional Progressive Caucus.

Headlee Override would have to be approved by voters.

"I've been pushing to get this out to voters, so we can have an answer," he said.

Meanwhile, he said roads keep deteriorating. Moreover, he said that addressing road issues slowly, piece by piece, costs more in the long run because prices keep rising.

Zak said that the most the city can bond right now is slightly more than $400,000. "That's a drop in the bucket," he said. "That's how broken the Michigan tax system is. I think the Michigan tax system needs to be revamped."

Loper stated the city can borrow only up to its debt limit for roads. She added that she inquired about the possibility of revenue bonds but learned that they apply only when road tolls are involved.

The city manager cited an added issue in the Downtown Development Authority also being hampered by bonding limits.

Zak said he would like state representatives to come to visit with council members.

Councilman Terry Kryshak implied that the timing for such a visit is good, given that it's an election year. "The ones running all need to come here, and they need to listen to us," he said.

"We need a dialogue," agreed Councilman Rob Brown. "We know we're an afterthought as far as the state is concerned."

Loper said that she will send representatives and current candidates an invitation and added, "We'll see if they respond."

Coleman concluded that helping voters to understand the nature of a Headlee Override will be an important step to success. "We really have to educate people on this to let them know exactly what this means," he said.

Toward that end, the website for the Michigan State University Extension Office includes an article by Eric Walcott that responds to the following question: "What does it mean when a local government unit asks voters to approve a Headlee Override?"

Walcott's answer, in part is as follows: "A Headlee Override involves asking the voters to approve raising the millage rate to its original rate after it has been forced to be rolled back because of growth in property values."

In addition, he advises voters who see such a provision on their local ballot to "know that, basically, the local government is asking voters to approve raising a millage above its current rate, but no higher than its original rate authorized by the voters."

Barbara I. Jackson

IRONWOOD, Mich. — Barbara I. Jackson, 96, a longtime resident of Erwin Township, passed away on Tuesday, Aug. 9, 2022.

Funeral arrangements will be announced later by Jerald Rocco, owner and manager of Lakeside Memorial Chapel Inc., in Wakefield.

Trump says he took the Fifth in NY civil investigation

NEW YORK (AP) — Donald Trump invoked his Fifth Amendment protection against self-incrimination as he testified under oath Wednesday in the New York attorney general's long-running civil investigation into his business dealings, the former president said in a statement.

Trump arrived at Attorney General Letitia James' Manhattan offices in a motorcade shortly before 9 a.m., before announcing more than an hour later that he "declined to answer the questions under the rights and privileges afforded to every citizen under the United States Constitution."

"I once asked, 'If you're innocent, why are you taking the Fifth Amendment?' Now I know the answer to that question," the statement said. "When your family, your company, and all the people in your orbit have become the targets of an unfounded politically motivated Witch Hunt supported by lawyers, prosecutors and the Fake News Media, you have no choice."

As vociferous as Trump has been in defending himself in written statements and on the rally stage, legal experts said answering questions in a deposition was risky because anything he said could potentially be used against him in a parallel criminal investigation by the Manhattan district attorney. The Fifth Amendment protects people from being compelled to be a witness against themselves in a criminal case.

Wednesday's events unfolded as a flurry of legal activity surrounds the former president. Just days before, FBI agents searched his Mar-a-Lago estate in Florida as part of an unrelated federal probe into whether he took classified records when he left the White House.

New York's investigation, led by James, involves allegations that Trump's company, the Trump Organization, misled lenders and tax authorities about the value of prized assets like golf courses and skyscrapers.

"My great company, and myself, are being attacked from all sides," Trump wrote beforehand on Truth Social, the social media platform he founded. "Banana Republic!"

In May, James' office said that it was nearing the end of an investigation against Trump, his company or both. The Republican's deposition — a legal term for sworn testimony that's not given in court — was one of the few remaining missing pieces.

Once the investigation wraps up, the attorney general could decide to bring a lawsuit seeking financial penalties against Trump or his company, or even a ban on them being involved in certain types of businesses.

Two of Trump's adult children, Donald Jr. and Ivanka, testified in recent days, two people familiar with the matter said. The people were not authorized to speak publicly and did so on condition of anonymity. It's unclear whether they invoked the Fifth Amendment during their depositions. When their brother Eric Trump sat for a deposition in the same investigation in 2020, he invoked the Fifth more than 500 times, according to court papers.

James, a Democrat, has said in court filings that her office has uncovered "significant" evidence that Trump's company "used fraudulent or misleading asset valuations to obtain a host of economic benefits, including loans, insurance coverage, and tax deductions."

James alleges the Trump Organization exaggerated the value of its holdings to impress lenders or misstated what land was worth to slash its tax burden.

The company even exaggerated the size of Trump's Manhattan penthouse, saying it was nearly three times its actual size — a difference in value of about $200 million, James' office said.

Trump has denied the allegations, contending that seeking the best valuations is a common practice in the real estate industry. He's also accused James, who is Black, of racism in pursuing the investigation.

People generally don't have a constitutional right to avoid questions in a civil lawsuit, but Trump's legal team fought James' attempt to question him for months, arguing that the district attorney's parallel investigation created a risk he could face criminal charges.

President Joe Biden gives the pen he used to sign the "PACT Act of 2022" to Brielle Robinson, daughter of Sgt. 1st Class Heath Robinson, who died of cancer two years ago, during a ceremony in the East Room of the White House, Wednesday, in Washington.

Biden signs 'burn pits' help for veterans, a personal win, too

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Joe Biden, whose elder son Beau died of cancer years after deploying to Iraq, signed legislation on Wednesday expanding federal health care services for millions of veterans who served at military bases where toxic smoke billowed from huge "burn pits."

"We owe you," Biden said. "You're the backbone. You're the steel. You're the sinew. You're the very fiber that makes this country what it is."

The law, which Biden described as long overdue, caps a years-long battle to ensure treatment for chronic illnesses that veterans have blamed on burn pits, which were used to dispose of chemicals, tires, plastics, medical equipment and human waste on military bases. Estimates of affected troops run to 3 million or more.

"So many of you here today remind us that we have fought for this for so many years," he said during an emotional White House ceremony that reflected the struggles of military families — and the president's personal experience.

Biden was introduced by Danielle Robinson, the widow of Sgt. 1st Class Heath Robinson, who died of cancer two years ago. The legislation is named for him.

She described her late husband as "a soldier as strong as an ox" but also "the ultimate cuddler" for his daughter Brielle, who stood to her mother's side clutching a stuffed figurine wearing military camouflage.

"Ours is just one story," Danielle Robinson said. "So many military families have had to fight this terrible emotional battle. So many veterans are still battling burn pit illnesses today."

After the Robinsons took their seats for the president's remarks, Biden addressed Brielle directly.

"I know you miss your daddy. But he's with you all the time," he said. "He's inside you. He's going to whisper in your ear when you have hard decisions to make."

Then he pointed out that Brielle was sitting next to his grandson, the son of Beau Biden.

"His daddy lost to the same burn pits," Biden said. "He knows what you're going through."

It was the most direct link the president has publicly drawn between Beau's fatal brain cancer and burn pits. The president made addressing the problem one of his priorities during his State of the Union address in March.

"I was going to get this done, come hell or high water," he said Wednesday.

Sen. Jon Tester, D-Mont., who chairs the Senate Committee on Veterans' Affairs, said Biden was a driving force behind the legislation, which passed last week.

"He was continually pushing because whether Beau died of this or not, I think Joe thinks that it had some impact, and so he wanted this fixed," Tester said. "And because he thinks it was the right thing to do. So different president, different set of priorities, this would have probably never happened."

Burn pits were used in Iraq and Afghanistan to dispose of chemicals, cans, tires, plastics, medical equipment and human waste. However, 70% of disability claims involving exposure to the pits were denied by the Department of Veterans Affairs.

"For too long, too many veterans who got sick while fighting for our country had to fight for their care here at home," VA Secretary Denis McDonough said at Wednesday's ceremony.

The legislation will direct officials to assume that certain respiratory illnesses and cancers were related to burn pit exposure, helping veterans get disability payments without having to prove the illness was the result of their service.

"Veterans who have been sickened to the point of being unable to work, unable to take care of their families, won't have to spend that time fighting the government to get the healthcare they earned," said Jeremy Butler, head of the Iraq and Afghanistan Veterans of America. "This is monumental."

Butler attended the ceremony, along with Le Roy and Rosie Torres, husband and wife advocates for veterans health care who started the organization Burn Pits 360. Le Roy developed constrictive bronchitis after serving in Iraq, making breathing difficult.

Although the provision involving burn pits has garnered the most attention, other health care services will be expanded as well.

Veterans who have served since the Sept. 11 attacks will have a decade to sign up for VA health care, double the current five years.

And there's more help for veterans from the Vietnam War. The legislation adds hypertension to list of ailments that are presumed to be caused by exposure to Agent Orange, a herbicide used by the U.S. military to clear vegetation.

In addition, veterans who served during the war in Thailand, Cambodia, Laos, Guam, American Samoa and Johnston Atoll will also be considered to have been exposed to the chemical.

The legislation is considered to be the largest expansion of veterans health care in more than three decades, but it became an unlikely political football shortly before it passed.

On the day that the Senate was expected to grant its final approval, Republicans unexpectedly blocked it. Veterans who had traveled to Washington for a moment of triumph were devastated.

"All the veterans were down there because they were expecting to celebrate," Butler said. "And then they were absolutely stabbed in the back."

Republicans said they were concerned about technical changes to how the legislation was funded. Democrats accused them of throwing a fit because they were unhappy about a separate deal to advance Biden's domestic agenda on climate change, taxes and prescription drugs.

Instead of going home, some veterans began holding what they called a "fire watch" outside the Capitol, an impromptu vigil to keep public pressure on the Senate.

They stayed around the clock, despite the stifling summer heat and torrential thunderstorms. Jon Stewart, the comedian who has advocated for veterans, joined them as well. Biden wanted to go but couldn't because he was isolating with a coronavirus infection, so he spoke to the demonstrators in a video call when VA Secretary Denis McDonough dropped off pizza.

Days after the demonstration began, the Senate held another vote, and the measure passed with overwhelming bipartisan support.

Veterans were in the gallery watching the vote take place.

"Every single person I was with was bawling. Just bawling," said Matt Zeller, a former Army captain who was among the demonstrators. "I cried for a solid five minutes."

Horses

the tussle definitely rose everyone's adrenalin and demonstrated why viewing the connection process is just as fascinating as the pull.

"Those guys help each other," said Ken Langlois of Ontonagon by phone on Tuesday. He explained how members of each team assist fellow competitors during the hooking up process. They even run beside the sled as it moves, so they're ready to set up the next pull.

As Hill noted later, "There's a lot of sportsmanship."

Langlois, who exceeded the event, also emphasized to the crowd how important it is for each team of horses to work together. "They can't do it alone," he said over the microphone. "These horses have to work as a team."

According to Langlois, the sled that the horses pulled weighed 1,000 pounds in itself, and the contest started with cement weights that brought the total sled weight to 3,000 pounds. Additional weight then was added incrementally to reach the contest maximum of 7,500 pounds.

After the race, Dean Kurth said the object was for the horses to pull for 27 and one-half feet. "That's considered a full pull," he claimed, adding that time is not an issue.

Langlois said that Sunday's race included two divisions: heavyweight (above 3,620 pounds in combined team weight) and middleweight (between 3,420-3,620 pounds combined). There was no lightweight division.

Brock Swartz of Hurley explained how the event has grown from a casual, local competition to one with statewide status.

"In the past, this was kind of bragging rights for the local farmers," said Swartz of the early days. Now, he said that, for nearly a decade, the event has been officially registered with the Wisconsin Horse Pullers Association.

"This has been going on since about 1941," said Dan Rowe of Gurney, who claimed that it's the longest running horse pull in the state of Wisconsin, having missed only 2020 when the fair was cancelled for the COVID-19 pandemic.

Both Swartz and Rowe, who were watching the event, are members of the Iron County Fair Board.

Langlois — who was comfortable in his role of keeping the crowd informed — said he learned all he knows about exceeding from his friend, Dale Venema, for whom he was substituting while Venema was on medical leave. Both men are from Ontonagon.

Langlois made a point to acknowledge everyone involved in the event. "A lot of pieces go into pulling this together," he told the audience.

He commended the businesses which help sponsor the event, as well as the members of the White Thunder Riders Snowmobile Club of Hurley helped with hauling the cement blocks.

Langlois, who said various volunteers have been involved for years, also regularly complimented both the drivers ("nice job") and the horses ("real horse power").

Moreover, he explained of the horses' owners, "A lot of work goes into training and eating," and then added, chuckling, "Think these horses can eat a little bit? Yeah."

Langlois also told the crowd that the animals know exactly what's expected of them. "It's not their first rodeo," he assured.

The one exception was Tia, who was pulling for the first time, according to Dean Kurth, who noted that her name is registered as "Tia," whereas they spell it as "Tea" at home.

Langlois said that Jordan Kurth opted to drop from the competition after crossing 5,500 pounds, and he attributed it to not wanting to stress Tia on her first pull.

Cortney Ofstad, secretary-treasurer of the Iron County Fair Board, said that heavyweight winners in the competition were John Petras, who drove his horses, Axel and Ryker, in first place, and Jordan Kurth in second.

Middleweight winners were Luke Jacobs, driving his horses Rocky and Spotty Doty, in first place, and Mark Hill in second.

Petras and Jacobs are both from Greenwood, Wisconsin.

Ofstad said that both first place winners won $200, and second-place winners won $175.

As for what lay ahead for the animals after leaving Saxon's Iron County Fairgrounds, Jordan Kurth said the roughly 20 animals that he and his father own stay busy even when they aren't competing.

"In the winter, we do sleigh rides, and then we also do logging," he said, adding that the horses also do some farm work "just so they don't sit around."

He attributed their restlessness after the competition to being bored at being momentarily tied up. "They like to pull," he assured.

In the midst of the contest, Langlois summarized the owners and drivers to the crowd: "They love these horses. They love this sport. It's their passion. It's their life."

Draft animals — which include the recognizable breed of Clydesdales — also have a heart, as noted by Miles Henry on his website called Horse Racing Sense. He describes them as "gentle giants" whose mighty muscle and good nature have been serving mankind since long before machinery was invented.

Brewers break out of recent slide with 5-3 victory over Rays

MILWAUKEE (AP) — With each of Milwaukee's top two closer options unavailable, Matt Bush stepped in and showcased the depth of the Brewers' bullpen as they adapt to life without four-time All-Star Josh Hader.

Bush, acquired from the Texas Rangers last week, struck out two batters and retired the side in order in the ninth inning to close out the Brewers' 5-3 victory over the Tampa Bay Rays on Tuesday night.

"That's as good of an inning as we've seen this year," Brewers manager Craig Counsell said.

Milwaukee won for just the second time in eight games to move to within one game of the NL Central-leading St. Louis Cardinals, who fell 16-5 to the Colorado Rockies.

The Brewers have gone 2-5 and have fallen out of first place in the division standings since trading Hader to the San Diego Padres last week.

"We'd be lying if we said we weren't looking at it," Milwaukee's Andrew McCutchen said. "Everyone looks at it. You can't help but see it even when you're not looking for it. I'm a big baseball fan, so I'm always watching baseball. I'm always following what's going on. I see that, of course. But I also understand we've just got to take care of business. Whatever's ahead of us, in front of us, take care of that. Be where your feet are."

McCutchen and Kolten Wong each drove in two runs. Tyrone Taylor made a leaping catch to rob Tampa Bay's David Peralta of a homer.

Bush picked up his second save of the season, with his other coming April 23 as a member of the Rangers. His last save before this season was back in 2017.

The Brewers opted for Bush because Devin Williams had pitched four of the last six days and Taylor Rogers had undergone a cortisone shot in his left knee Sunday.

Rogers was one of the players the Brewers acquired in the Hader trade. Counsell said he hoped Rogers would be available Wednesday.

Milwaukee's Freddy Peralta (4-2) struck out four while allowing two runs, two hits and no walks over five innings in his second start since coming off the injured list. Peralta, who threw 65 pitches Tuesday, had missed nearly 2½ months with a shoulder injury.

Tampa Bay managed just four hits, though Yandy Díaz broke out of an 0-for-21 slump by hitting a two-run homer.

"They pitched well," Rays manager Kevin Cash said. "Another day of us not swinging the bats maybe to our capabilities."

The Rays also got a tough break.

Peralta led off the top of the second with a drive to right center, but Taylor timed his jump correctly and reached his glove over the wall to make the catch and prevent a game-tying homer. Taylor said he hadn't reached over the wall to prevent a homer like that since he was in the Single-A Florida State League.

"That was the coolest thing I've done on defense," Taylor said. "I've made some pretty cool catches in the minor leagues and stuff, but this is the big leagues. It's like something you dream of as a kid, playing baseball in your backyard."

Bieber's strong outing leads Guardians past Tigers

DETROIT (AP) — Shane Bieber pitched seven dominant innings, Oscar Gonzalez drove in two runs and the Cleveland Guardians beat the Detroit Tigers 5-2 Tuesday night for their third straight win.

Bieber (7-6) allowed just four singles and a walk while striking out eight. Amed Rosario had three hits, including two doubles, while scoring a run and driving in another.

Bieber has won his last three starts, giving up just three earned runs in 20 innings during that stretch.

"Even tonight, he kind of mentioned to (pitching coach Carl Willis) that he was frustrated trying to find his release point," manager Terry Francona said. "If that's frustration, I hope he's frustrated a lot because I thought he was really good."

In the Guardians' previous two victories, starters Cal Quantrill and Triston McKenzie also held the opposition scoreless.

Miners begin practice

THE GOGEBIC Miners started practice with 38 players on Monday at Massie Field in Bessemer. They expect two more players to come after family vacations. They start the season on Aug. 25 in Ontonagon.

Packers experimenting on O-line with Bakhtiari, Jenkins out

GREEN BAY, Wis. (AP) — The uncertain status of their top two blockers has caused the Green Bay Packers to experiment with different offensive line combinations in training camp.

That shuffling could continue right up to the start of the season.

David Bakhtiari still isn't practicing as he recovers from a torn left anterior cruciate ligament that caused him to miss nearly the entire 2021 season. Elgton Jenkins tore his left ACL last November.

That has forced the Packers to capitalize on the versatility of their remaining linemen by putting them in various spots. Packers coach Matt LaFleur acknowledges it has been a learning process.

"There's definitely some mental mistakes, there's technique errors, just some lack of communication amongst the front," LaFleur said. They are going against a pretty salty (defensive line) group, so I think it's for the betterment of our offensive line. But, certainly, we're nowhere near where we want to be or need to be."

The struggles are understandable for a line missing its two top players.

Bakhtiari earned All-Pro honors in 2018 and 2020 and was a second-team selection in 2016, 2017 and 2019. The left tackle's only appearance during the 2021 season was in the regular-season finale, where he suffered a setback that prevented him from playing in the Packers' divisional playoff loss to the San Francisco 49ers.

Jenkins, a 2020 Pro Bowl left guard, filled in for Bakhtiari at left tackle before suffering his own injury. Jenkins says he still hasn't given up on the possibility of playing in the season opener, though the usual recovery time for these types of injuries makes that seem unlikely.

"Right now, we're actually in the ramp-up process, trying to see what all the knee can take and how it responds to different things," Jenkins said.

The Packers already were dealing with the losses of right tackle Billy Turner (Denver) and guard Lucas Patrick (Chicago).

That makes the offensive line one of the Packers' greatest concerns heading into their Sept. 11 season opener at Minnesota. The Vikings pass rush features former Packer Za'Darius Smith, who had a combined 26 sacks for Green Bay from 2019-20 before a back injury limited him to one regular-season game and one playoff game last season.

"I think that there's definitely some spots open," quarterback and reigning MVP Aaron Rodgers said. "There could be interest in people not in the building right now. I'm not sure, I haven't talked to Gutey (general manager Brian Gutekunst) about that. We need to see those guys step up and somebody take it over."

So far, there's been plenty of mixing and matching.

Royce Newman is working at right tackle as well as right guard, where he made 16 starts as a rookie last year.

Yosh Nijman, who made eight starts at left tackle last season, has lined up at both left and right tackle.

"You just flip everything in your head and trust your instincts," Nijman said of playing both tackle spots. "Being a professional, you go through these things a lot. It's important that you be able to do something like that on the fly and have it be natural."

Runyan is a returning starter at left guard. Myers was Green Bay's starting center as a rookie when healthy last year, but played in only six games because of injury. Hanson hasn't made a start over his first two seasons.

But the Packers continue to work out various combinations, and how they'll arrange the line once Bakhtiari and Jenkins return remains uncertain.

Another possibility is rookie Zach Tom.

The fourth-round pick from Wake Forest, has earned first-team reps at each tackle spot during training camp while showcasing his versatility. He's one of three linemen the Packers drafted this year, along with third-round pick Sean Rhyhan of UCLA and seventh-round selection Rasheed Walker from Penn State.

"It's about going out there, when they put you with the 1's, they expect you to perform like a 1," Tom said.

"It's not an excuse, that I'm a rookie, to not go out there and perform. I'm just trying to make the most of my opportunity and show that I can play in this league and be somebody that they can trust."

Gaining that trust could be a gradual process for all these young linemen as the Packers wait for the return of Bakhtiari and Jenkins.

"We need to see them play well and have some really good moments so we feel good going into Minnesota and that pass rush that they've got," Rodgers said.

THE GRIZZWELLS

Cold feet persist 20 years later

Dear Annie: Nearly 20 years ago, after a tumultuous breakup, I met and married my current wife. I cared for her, but I did not love her as one should love another when entering into marriage.

Dear Annie

After the breakup, and, honestly, before, I was lost. I was in my mid-20s and fearful I would never meet someone, get married and have children, and I thought of this commitment as my last opportunity. The relationship was going well until one of her family members shared that my girlfriend, now wife, was questioning my commitment, as I had yet to propose — which I was not ready for but did shortly after, out of fear.

Over the years, I have and continue to have difficulty showing any emotion toward her, resulting in heart-wrenching fights, verbally brutal arguments and constant disagreements that continue to plague our family.

Many times, we have contemplated divorce, but she is indescribably petrified to be alone and I worry that she could not handle it. As the years went on and our children were born, I pushed those feelings down, until last year when she suffered a miscarriage and I realized there was nothing to keep those feelings from resurfacing. I told her I didn't love her and I am not sure I ever did. I also took off my wedding ring, which I haven't worn for months now. I thought that would be the end of us, but to my astonishment, it wasn't.

For the past year or more, we have been sleeping separately and have been emotionally and physically disconnected. I have told her that she deserves so much better and should allow herself the opportunity to be happy, but she is so afraid of what others will say, including her family, that she refuses to consider separation. I have tried to reassure her that, regardless, our lives will be intertwined forever and I will always be there for her and my children both emotionally and financially, and that we will work together to parent and amicably split everything. But still, she declines to even consider separation as an option.

My wife is a great person. She is extremely kind; she is a wonderful mother and does everything she can for our children and our family. But she deserves so much better than me, and most importantly, she deserves happiness.

How can I help her see this? Or should I just surrender and continue to endure this mundane lifeless purgatory, as it stems from my selfishness and fear? — Going Through the Motions

Dear Going Through the Motions: Your wife certainly does sound like a great person and a great mother. She is being held back by not just her fear but also her love for you and for the family you've created together. This news that you never loved her — delivered right after a miscarriage, no less — is undoubtedly causing her a terrible heartache.

Still, a marriage that one partner does not want to be in is detrimental for both partners, as well as the children. My suggestion is that you reexamine your feelings with a professional, to make absolutely certain that she is not for you and that everyone would be better off apart from each other. In therapy, it is possible you will discover that you actually do love her, but, just as she is terrified of separation, you might be terrified of letting yourself go, of admitting any vulnerability. A professional therapist can help you make sense of what is best for you, your wife and your children.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — If you let someone railroad you into something you haven't thought through, you'll find it difficult to accommodate your desires. Don't give away personal plans. Be a leader, not a follower.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Use your internal radar to figure out what others are thinking. Staying ahead of the competition is mandatory. Listen and observe what others do, and you'll devise an efficient alternative.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Pitch in and you'll gain trust and support from someone who can help you advance. A change of plans will unfold if you explain options to those you need to help you complete what you want to achieve.

Ask The Doctors

by Elizabeth Ko, M.D. & Eve Glazier, M.D.

EXPOSURE TO ARTIFICIAL LIGHT DISRUPTS CIRCADIAN RHYTHMS

Dear Doctors: I need it to be completely dark to sleep well. I've got blackout curtains, I use an analog clock and I even duct-taped the digital lights on the smoke alarm. I just read that light at night is bad for your health. Is that true? I want my husband to know I'm not overreacting about this.

Dear Reader: Most of us live in a world saturated with artificial light. Even those in more rural areas, who have the luxury of dark(er) night skies, scramble their circadian clocks once the sun sets. Electric lights and all manner of digital screens derail the body's precisely calibrated daily rhythms of light and dark.

As we've discussed here before, research has tied these ongoing disruptions to an array of adverse health effects. This includes the obvious, such as poor sleep and insomnia, and the unexpected, including inflammation, obesity and an increased risk of cardiovascular problems and metabolic disorders. Now, the findings of a new study have linked consistent exposure to light while sleeping to high blood pressure, weight gain and Type 2 diabetes in older adults. The study, which was conducted by researchers at Northwestern University, looked at health data collected from 552 adults. They ranged in age from 63 to 84 years of age. Each participant was screened for preexisting cardiovascular conditions and had their activity levels, as well as their levels of nighttime light exposure, measured for a week. The study found that the participants who were exposed to more light during sleep were twice as likely to have Type 2 diabetes as those who slept in a darker environment. They were also nearly twice as likely to have high blood pressure, and to be obese. Interestingly -- and this backs up your vigilance with the duct tape -- the sources of light ranged from light bulbs and bedroom TV sets to the seemingly minor spill from digital devices. When the researchers analyzed their data, they found that fewer than half of the study participants managed to eke out five hours of complete darkness per day, even during time set aside for sleep. While these types of studies can uncover patterns, they can't say why those patterns occur. As the researchers pointed out, nighttime lighting may have contributed to the health issues that were uncovered, or the health issues themselves may have led to the need for extra light. Still, new research now shows that circadian clocks and their corresponding cycles are programmed into our bodies at a cellular level. We think it makes sense to give ourselves the closest approximation of the daily rhythms of light and dark possible. If you must have a night-light, keep it dim and close to the floor. Choose amber or even red bulbs, which are less stimulating for the brain. When you can't control outdoor light pollution, use blackout curtains or a good eye shade. The blue light from digital devices is particularly disruptive. Ban screens from the bedroom and, if possible, avoid looking at them at least an hour before bed.

NFL's Hall of Fame game ranked third for week of TV

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Football is back and the NFL's Hall of Fame Game was among last week's top-rated shows last week.

According to Nielsen figures, just shy of 5.5 million people saw the Las Vegas Raiders defeat the Jacksonville Jaguars, 27 to 11, in the exhibition game in Canton, Ohio, on Thursday, Aug. 4. That made it the third-watched show for the week of Aug. 1-7, behind "America's Got Talent" and news magazine "60 Minutes Presents."

The CMA Fest was in the eighth spot with nearly 3.9 million viewers.

Viewers also favored game shows and contests, including "Celebrity Family Feud" and "Big Brother," along with reruns of scripted dramas and comedies including "FBI" and "The Neighborhood."

The top 20 shows for the week Aug. 1-7 included:

1. "America's Got Talent" (Tuesday), NBC, 6.24 million.
2. "60 Minutes Presents," CBS, 5.93 million.

4. "Celebrity Family Feud," ABC, 4.73 million.
5. NFL weather delay, NBC, 4.16 million.
6. "The $100,000 Pyramid," ABC, 4.14 million.
7. "Big Brother" (Sunday), CBS, 3.96 million.
8. CMA Fest, ABC, 3.86 million.
9. "Big Brother" (Wednesday), CBS, 3.83 million.
10. "FBI," CBS, 3.82 million.

Heche in critical condition, on ventilator after crash

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Anne Heche remained hospitalized on a ventilator to help her breathe and faced surgery Tuesday, four days after the actor was injured in a fiery car crash.

"Shortly after the accident, Anne became unconscious, slipping into a coma and is in critical condition," spokeswoman Heather Duffy Boylston said in an email. "She has a significant pulmonary injury requiring mechanical ventilation and burns that require surgical intervention."

Pulmonary means having to do with the lungs. No further details were provided by Duffy Boylston, who is Heche's friend and podcast partner.

On Aug. 5, Heche's car smashed into a house in the Mar Vista area of Los Angeles' westside. Flames erupted, and Heche, who was alone in the car, was pulled by firefighters from the vehicle embedded in the house. It took nearly 60 firefighters more than an hour to douse the flames, the Los Angeles Fire Department said.

A native of Ohio, Heche first came to prominence on the NBC soap opera "Another World" from 1987 to 1991, for which she won a Daytime Emmy Award.

Her film career took off in the late 1990s, with Heche playing opposite stars including Johnny Depp ("Donnie Brasco") and Harrison Ford ("Six Days, Seven Nights").

In a 2001 memoir, "Call Me Crazy," Heche talked about her lifelong struggles with mental health and a childhood of abuse.

She was married to camera operator Coleman Laffoon from 2001 to 2009. The two had a son together. She had another son during a relationship with actor James Tupper, her co-star on the TV series "Men In Trees."

Heche has worked consistently in smaller films, on Broadway, and on TV shows in the past two decades.

Spider-man

never going to be a dearth of people who want to fight for what's right."

In July, Spider-Man was inducted into the Comic-Con Hall of Fame during the annual convention in San Diego. Fans flooded the convention hall in costumes that spanned various iterations of the character.

Because of the mask, Spider-Man has been a safer choice for cosplayers hoping to avoid the staunch purists, or those who criticize others for deviating from canonized representations of superheroes. But cosplay doesn't have to be canon, says Andrew Liptak, a historian and author of the book "Cosplay, a History: The Builders, Fans, and Makers Who Bring Your Favorite Stories to Life."

"Ultimately, it's about your relationship to the character," he says. "You're literally wearing your fandom on your sleeves."

Liptak also says it's unfair to expect fans of color to dress up only as superheroes whose appearance or skin color matches their own.

In the recent film "Spider-Man: No Way Home," Electro, the villain played by Academy Award-winning actor Jamie Foxx, joked to Andrew Garfield's Spider-Man that he was surprised Spider-Man wasn't Black. Whether or not that opens the door to a live-action Black Spider-Man in future films, Hoover says Spider-Man should never be boxed into just one look.

"You will get those who argue, if you turn Spider-Man Black then you can turn T'Challa white," Hoover says. "Spider-Man was never really defined by his ethnicity, but more so his social status and the struggles he went through. That's even more relatable for people of color and different ethnicities, because there's a lot of struggle involved in life that you have to persevere through."
